A FRIEND.

IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

A Pleasant Meeting of the Missionaries and Others at Manard.

[Correspondence of the DESERET NEWS.]

Since last writing from [illegible] we have again assembled ourselves at our Indian home at Manard. Ten Elders, most of whom wended their way through the country to this place, arrived here on Jan. 23, all in the enjoyment of good health, having survived the unpleasant, cold and stormy weather which recently swept over the country. Through the blessings of the Lord we have been fortunate in finding kind friends, and have lacked for neither food nor shelter. Our friend Mr. Hendricks graciously granted us the use of a piece of land on which to build a meeting house, and we selected a beautiful spot on the outskirts of a small prairie, a short distance south of his house. Sunday opened up like a beautiful spring morning. At 10 a.m. the Elders and others met on the chosen site, sang hymns and, after appropriate exercises, dedicated the ground. President Kimball offered the dedicatory prayer. A peaceful influence prevailed, and the feeling of all present was one of thankfulness and gratitude to our Heavenly Father for the privilege of the occasion. All was quiet and quiet, no opposition having yet been heard. Liberal contributions have already been made, and many people for sixty miles around proffered assistance. This, the first place of worship erected by the Latter-day Saints, will be designated the "Manard Meeting House."

We adjourned to the house and held a meeting in which the officers chosen were set apart. It was suggested that an assistant treasurer was necessary and sister Ann C. Hendricks was set apart to fill the office, which she accepted.

After consideration as to the most appropriate time for the annual conference in the Indian Territory mission, it was unanimously decided to hold it here at Manard, Cherokee Nation, beginning Oct. 15, 1892.

On Monday morning, at [illegible], we all set out for the cemetery at Fort Gibson, a distance of eight Indian miles, where arrangements were made to meet the leading photographer of the country and have a group photo taken. The cemetery is a beautiful spot—[illegible] enclosed by a substantial [illegible] wall, with three iron gates on the [illegible] side, the centre one for a drive. [illegible], near the entrance, is a very nice residence, with out houses. The walks and general surroundings are neat and tidy. In the centre of the lot, on a little mound, is an iron pole, upwards of sixty feet high, on which the Stars and Stripes are unfurled. Surrounding this mound are the monuments to the principal officers; and nearly covering the entire ground, which is an entire lower [illegible] with beautiful trees, are the headstones of the soldiers, numbering [illegible] 2418—2122 of these are unknown. After the taking of the photograph, and while making preparations to leave, we were happily surprised with an invitation from Supt. J. H. Dickson to go to the dining room, where we partook of a sumptuous repast provided by Mrs. Dickson and her assistants. A social time was enjoyed, with music, singing, conversation, etc. It was an occasion long to be remembered by the Elders.

One of the last events of our pleasant gatherings was at the home of our friends Uncle and Auntie Hendricks. Previous to our parting—Elder Kimball to his home in Salt Lake, Elder Dalton to Europe, and the traveling Elders to their various fields of labor—our Aunt Hendricks prepared a nice dinner.

A pleasant evening was spent together. President Kimball and Elder Dalton, in their farewell addresses, gave some useful instructions. Words cannot express the joy and satisfaction which the Elders and their many friends entertain towards them for their much appreciated visit, which will certainly prove a great impetus to the success of the mission, especially in their old field of labor.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, and the spread of truth,
