CONTESTED ELECTION,

TERRITORY OF UTAH.

Geo. R. Maxwell vs. Geo. Q. Cannon.

Argument of Robert N. Pelton, Counsel for Mr. Maxwell.

(Before the Committee on Elections of the House of Representatives of the United States, Washington, D. C., 1874.)

"Whereas, at the last session of Congress, a select committee of this House reported the following resolutions, to wit: (the resolutions above quoted.)

"And whereas the first of said resolutions was adopted by the House of Representatives, on the 27th of February last, by a vote of 145 yeas to 17 nays; and the said second resolution was adopted by the House on the same day without division; and whereas, said Matteson had, prior to any vote being taken on the last resolution, resigned his seat in the House, and thus avoided the effect of the same; and whereas the said Matteson is a member of this House with the imputations conveyed by the passage of the first two of the foregoing resolutions still upon him, and without having been subsequently indorsed by his constituents; therefore,

"Resolved, That Orsamus B. Matteson, a member of this House from the State of New York, be and he is hereby expelled from this House."

This resolution was referred to a select committee, who reported back the resolutions with the following recommendation:

"Resolved, That it is inexpedient for this House to take any further action in regard to this resolution proposing to expel O. B. Matteson."

The case of Mr. Matteson in the 35th Congress was a case arising, not under the clause of the Constitution which makes each house the judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its members, but under that clause which confers the power of expulsion. On the 22nd day of March, 1858, Mr. Seward, of Georgia, submitted the report of the select committee to the House. In this report the committee said that it was necessary at the outset to ascertain whether Mr. Matteson was constitutionally or legally disqualified for the office of Representative. They cited that section of the Constitution which provides that "no person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained the age of twenty-five years, and have been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen." They said that it had not been claimed that Mr. Matteson was ineligible because wanting in either of the qualifications thus prescribed, or that any statutory disqualification attached to him, and that Mr. Matteson, being thus eligible, had been admitted to his seat in the House upon taking the usual oath of office; that the House was called upon to expel Mr. Matteson for causes alleged to have arisen not during the term of the 35th Congress. It seemed to the committee indisputable that Mr. Matteson's right to his seat was wholly unaffected by the proceedings which had taken place on the resolution for his expulsion in the 34th Congress. They held that the power of the House of Representatives of each Congress was ample and complete to punish its members for disorderly behavior, and for any misconduct inconsistent with the character of a Representative of which they might be guilty while members thereof; that this power was not left to uncertainty; that it was not necessary to invoke any inherent power as incident to legislative bodies; that no such power belonged to Congress, whatever might belong to the Legislatures of the States; that the powers and privileges of the House had been defined in the Constitution by the people; that the exercise of other powers would be a violation of their rights; that the expulsion of Mr. Matteson would be but the entering upon a fearful contest with the American people to deprive them of their rights and privileges; that the exercise of such a power by the House would be a flagrant usurpation of power never granted to that body, and would ultimately annihilate the power of the people in the choice of their Representatives; that it was a question of usurpation on the one side and American freedom upon the other. The committee reported (as I have already stated) that it was inexpedient for the House to take any further action in regard to the resolutions.
