SPRAYING TREES.

The bill which has been introduced in the House to repeal the present law providing for the spraying of trees is an ill-advised measure. The sentiment it expresses is one that favors sitting supinely down while the orchards and fruit interests of the State go to utter ruin.

It is more than possible that the spraying law is not what it ought to be; that it is defective in the machinery which it provides for its own enforcement, and that it fails to cover the subject sufficiently. If this is true, amend it. Embrace within its provisions the highest scientific knowledge attainable respecting horticulture in our State, and the most effective means possible for the execution of those provisions.

Nature has given Utah both climate and soil that are magnificently adapted to fruit culture in great variety, and if man will bestir himself and do his part, that industry can be made to produce food and revenue in enormous quantities. But it will require industry, persistence and intelligence to overcome the insect pests that so long have produced discouragement to the owners of fruit trees.

The Legislature should refuse to listen for a moment to any suggestion of retreat in this matter. The present spraying law was a step in the right direction. It has many intelligent, observing friends in all parts of the State, who firmly believe in the benefit derived from spraying fruit trees in a proper manner and at the right time. Perfect the law, but don't repeal it!

THE VACANT LOT SCHEME.

The resolution passed by the Salt Lake county commissioners on Wednesday, inviting the city officials to unite with the county in a scheme to have vacant land in this vicinity utilized in raising vegetables for the poor, is on a subject that deserves careful consideration. A plan of this kind has been successful elsewhere, and there is no reason why it should not be so here, in giving employment and some remuneration to those who now have to be assisted from the public funds. Twenty thousand dollars is a large amount for this county to spend in a year outside of its infirmary, yet that is the amount reported as going in that direction in 1896, with a prospect that under the present system as much or more will go in the future, unless the poor are neglected. Yet many of those who receive this assistance are able and should be required to perform some service in return; or if the funds that otherwise would go to them could be invested as the county commissioners propose, and in connection with the added labor of the individual be made to bring increased returns in the way of food, there would be so much gained. So far as the vacant land is concerned, there should be plenty available. Hundreds of acres of some of the best land in the State, here in Salt Lake county, lie idle. It would be of advantage to the owners and public generally to have that cultivated and improved. If the county commissioners can carry out successfully the proposition now made, it will be a great benefit. But let no one think the work can be done well without the application of strict attention, considerable business tact, and much labor.

SUGAR BEETS AND FARMERS.

Fortune-making among workaday people is not an easy thing nowadays, when all industrial pursuits seem to be crowded to a minimum in the profits they yield. So neither the mechanic nor the agriculturist may expect very rich returns from his efforts. But the the sugar beet raisers this year have received a fair recompense for their labors, under existing conditions, is shown in connection with the proceedings at the Lehi sugar factory, which now is on its last week's run for this season. The Lehi Banner, giving the best report for 1896, presents an interesting table of the quantity received at the factory and the localities where the beets were raised, and remarks concerning Lehi and Springville, which led in production, that "no delinquent tax list was published in either city." The farmers of Lehi alone received nearly $40,000 for their beets. None can dispute that the sugar factory, in the large amount of capital it has kept working at home, the vast sum it has paid out to farmers and employes, and the amount it has been a direct and indirect cause of contributing to the public revenue, has been of great benefit to its immediate locality and to the State at large. Its record in these matters ought to be an incentive to renewed patriotism in sustaining and inviting in other industries generally, that the State might enjoy the improvement necessarily attending such a policy. The report of sugar beets raised for and taken by the factory in the 1896 season will be interesting for reference in the cause of home institutions. It is as follows:

FOR HONOR'S SAKE.

The grandiloquent talk about Spain preserving national honor in the conflict over Cuba may strike some minds favorably, but that hardly can be to a lover of justice when there is considered the barbarous method by which the Spaniards seek to uphold that honor. Not all the horrid practices of savage Indians are more horrible than the Spanish guerilla deeds reported from time to time, and which are verified as actual occurrences in many instances narrated, if not in all. Another of these terrible scenes is described in the recent conflict at Malena del Sur, where, in revenge for defeat by the insurgents, a number Spanish [illegible] and the women and girls residing in the the town and subjected them to the most horrible practices. The proceedings of the fiendish Spanish guerilla troops is too awful for contemplation. If this is the method of warfare that Spain pursues for the sake of its national honor, then for the honor of civilization the quicker some other nation interferes and crushes Spanish power the less disgrace there will be attached to an enlightened age that has permitted these things to go on at all.

LOOKS LIKE A MISTAKE.

In the criminal branch of the Third district court on Wednesday, the judge, upon receiving a plea of guilty from a young man charged with burglary, and the accused waiving time to which he was entitled for sentence, ordered the young man imprisoned in the State prison for fifteen months. A little later on the judge directed the sentence to be set aside, and commanded the culprit to appear this morning, at which time the term of imprisonment was fixed at two years. Whatever may have been the inspiration which moved the court to this increase of punishment, the effect will not be to increase respect for judicial consistency, either in the mind of the convict or of the public who note these proceedings. By the first sentence the court had conveyed direct to the prisoner an idea of what to expect; and the increase of that punishment cannot but awaken in the mind of the culprit a vengeful feeling, and in the mind of others a measure of contempt for such vacillation in the judicial mind. If the sentence had been made lighter on the second occasion it might have aroused a sense of gratitude in the culprit as an exhibition of judicial mercy; but as it is, the impression is one of severity which does not inspire added respect, because it is inconsistent. It looks as though the judge has erred the wrong way in exercising his discretion.

COINAGE QUESTION AGAIN.

Judge J. M. Washburn, in the Philadelphia American, presents the silver coinage question in a way that is not often considered by the people. He holds that between the free coinage of silver and its limited coinage the late election settled nothing, and could not settle it. His argument presents the view, in a clear, logical manner, that only the United States Supreme court can settle it in the present situation, and he insists that the way to proceed is for some citizen to demand of the officer of the mint to coin into money, at the present ratio of 16 to 1, any silver such citizen may possess; and if the officer of the mint refuses to accede to the demand to apply to the federal court for a writ of mandate, which Judge Washburn says must be granted in conformity with the Constitution of the United States.

Of course this proposition involves the validity of the law of 1873, by which Congress refused to coin silver in an unlimited manner; and this is where Judge Washburn says the question can be decided. He claims, and makes a strong showing in support of his claim, that if the question of the validity of the law of 1873 were to be tested in the Supreme court on the point of its limitation of silver coinage, that law would be declared void. He says:

The question as to the coinage of gold and silver needs only to be brought before the Supreme court, to be set forever at rest. There is no shadow of doubt as to how the court will decide the question. It will be wise to have such a decision, as it will finally settle the question, will quiet the mind of every citizen of our country, and give the country the gold and silver money approved by the Constitution.

In discussing the proposition of the invalidity of the law of 1873, should it be brought before the Supreme Court, he takes the position that the Constitution commands Congress to coin money; that at the date of the Constitution the money of the country was all foreign coins of gold and silver, and the country was bankrupt; that there is no doubt of the intention of the Constitution that Congress should coin all the gold and silver the country could obtain, and that such coins are tender in payment of debts. Accordingly, he says, a law refusing to coin silver or limiting its coinage is violative of the Constitution; any law of Congress saying that either gold or silver shall not be coined, or saying that either gold or silver coin of the United States shall not be tender in payment of debts, is violative of the Constitution. Hence, he holds that if a test case were to be brought, the Supreme court would have no alternative but to declare that, "without condition or shadow of doubt, the act of February 12, 1873, refusing coinage, in any manner, to silver, is a violation of the Constitution." He says:

It is impossible for the Supreme court not to hold that the Constitution obliges Congress to coin all the gold and silver the mines of the country will produce. It is plain that the Constitution obliges Congress to coin silver. Will that court say the Constitution does not so oblige Congress? The Constitution does not limit the amount of silver Congress shall coin. Will that court say that Congress may change the Constitution so as to limit the amount of silver it will coin? The Constitution makes both gold and silver coin tender in payment of debts. Will that court decide that Congress may destroy the tender of silver coins, and retain the tender of gold coins? Will that court decide that Congress may discriminate and allow gold to be coined to an unlimited extent and silver only to a limited extent? The principle in such a decision would allow Congress to abolish the Supreme court.

Therefore Judge Washburn thinks the agitation about unlimited coinage of silver is a waste of effort as applied to action by the voters. If silver men want unlimited coinage they have the same remedy that is open to all citizens when injured by a law of Congress in violation of the Constitution, that is, to invoke a decision of the Supreme court declaring the law to be unconstitutional. This would settle the question of limitation of coinage.

As to the standard, or unit of money, or ratio, he takes the stand that the Constitution does not fix that. It is left to Congress to make "the unit"—to "regulate the value of the money" it must coin. Hence the standard, the unit, or the ratio, is left entirely to Congress, and is a political question to be voted on by the people—a question of policy and political economy, in no respect judicial. With the first settled, as the judge says could be done quickly and easily in favor of the silver men, Congress would be compelled to either change the ratio or to let it go at the present standard of 16 to 1; but in either event there would be the free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver of the mines of this country.

EVERYBODY IN UTAH TO READ THIS

WHERE IS THERE A MORE BEAUTIFUL or more healthful city in the world than Salt Lake? Where is there another city of its size that so large a proportion of all tourists crossing the American continent stop to visit? [illegible] Nevada, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming or Colorado and ask the miner and the cattle man where they expect to live when they make a stake, and almost invariably they will tell you in Salt Lake, or give any city in the East, let the people know you are from Utah and a large per cent of them will say, "I have always had a desire to go to Salt Lake City to live." Now is it not reasonable to presume, with every one speaking so of the place, that this city is destined to have a steady, healthy growth and become a great city. Of Utah's one thousand and one attractions which is the greatest? Would not the verdict of absolute [illegible] Salt Lake and the Saltair Pavilion, with the finest bathing in the world, visited by from twenty to twenty-five thousand people in a day. It is not evident there will be built here, in the near future, hotels, restaurants, rooms in apartments, cottages and parks, with shade trees, lawns, fountains, drive ways, etc., where families will go during the hot months to enjoy a cool breeze from the Lake. When you consider that Saltair Cottage City at Saltair Beach is on the main line of the Salt Lake & Los Angeles railroad, which will be a direct line to the Pacific coast, you must realize the value of ground at that point. Saltair Cottage City begins at a point near the Lake and extends along the railway towards Salt Lake City, giving a frontage of one and one quarter miles along the track.
