The twenty-third annual communication will be held in Provo, January 23, 1894.

THE BANQUET.

After the installation a grand banquet attended by about one hundred and fifty Masons and guests was given in the Templeton hotel. The committee of arrangements, which consisted of Messrs. A. M. Grant, Isaiah Morris, E. P. Newell, Will J. Lynch, W. J. Shotwell, Samuel Pace, Joe Young and Charlie Stanton, worked hard to make it pleasant for those present and succeeded very well.

Mayor Baskin was on the program for an address and prefaced his remarks in the following language:

"There are some of the old members when Masonry was young in the territory, present who will appreciate my statement when I state that it is impossible for me to express the sentiments of my heart on this occasion. Then the fraternity was small, the acquaintance few, but tonight is a demonstration of the fact that the work begun twenty-two years ago has steadily gone forward. Masonry will continue to go forward. It has been prolific of good. It exists in every civilized land under the sun. On account of its immutable principles it has outlived kings and principalities. It walks hand in hand with civilization wherever civilization has advanced. It exists wherever Christianity has flourished. Its vital principles are such that it will continue to live. They are faith, hope and charity. Charity is the cornerstone of the Masonic fraternity."

After his honor had finished speaking prayer was offered by the Rev. Mr. Foster, after which feasting commenced at 10 o'clock and lasted until midnight.

During the disposition of the splendid and varied menu there were numerous toasts and responses and the whole concluded by Charlie Stanton singing his latest version of "Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay," the crowd joining in the chorus.

Shall Diamond Be Pardoned?

A petition has been sent to Governor Thomas praying for executive clemency in the case of William Diamond, the slayer of Edward Scott, who on April 10, 1891, was sentenced by Judge Zane to three years' imprisonment for manslaughter. The document is signed by S. S. Dickinson, J. C. Murphy, L. L. Baumgarten, W. S. Cromon, J. J. Daly and J. A. Heiss, members of the jury who convicted Diamond, and is strengthened by the endorsements of ex-Warden S. H. Parsons and Warden G. R. Squires. The petition sets forth that prior to the affair Diamond bore an excellent reputation and that on the trial extenuating circumstances were shown.

AMONG THE OSAGES.

Elders Harvey M. Rawlins, Jr., and Hyrum S. Lewis Kindly received by the Agent.—Visit to the Schools. Interesting Incidents.

In the spring of 1889, Elders John J. Hill and Jed W. Ashton visited the Osage agency and were kindly received by the agent, who was a profound gentleman. He gave them access in the tribe, but as it was not a suitable time for proselyting advised them to meet with the chiefs when they would assemble in council, telling them, when it would take place, they could be introduced to the heads of the various tribes and districts.

During the interval subsequent to the council, Elder Ashton took sick with chills and fever and by the time they reached the agency again another agent had control of the reservation; this time, an unjust, arbitrary and bigoted minister. The Elders were denied every request and were obliged to abandon their project. Some time since we learned of a change, from the present prospects, a good one and an opening will likely be made for the preaching of the Gospel to that people.

The Osage Tribe live on a reservation west of the Cherokee strip, south of Kansas and north of Oklahoma, sixteen hundred and fifty in number. Seven hundred are educated in the English language; six hundred and fifty are mixed, mostly with the French traders of that nation coming among them at an early day. They are termed semi-civilized, rapidly approaching civilization. The majority can understand English, though they do not talk much. Their tribal relationship is only partially kept up. They have sixteen chiefs at the head of their bands, while they live in five districts. Their principal chief, Mr. Ne-Koh-Wah-She-Tan-Kah, presides at their councils where the laws are made, and is as a father to the tribal relationship. As a rule the tribe is decreasing, but of late some have been added from the old state, establishing their rights as citizens. Each individual has a quarterly allowance from the government of $55. This is quite an inducement for Indians hearing relationship to establish their rights, and many white people go there to get rich.

Says Brother Rawlins: "According to arrangements at our conference at Manard, we set out for the west. We traveled one hundred and fifteen miles in a northwesterly direction to Bartlesville within three miles of the Osage line. Another walk of twenty-five miles brought us to the agency. The first thing of interest was the Council house, a building ten feet high by 100 in circumference with only a partition. This is used for the dance and other athletic sports, which take place quarterly. The agency or town at the reservation has a population of 1200 Osage and white people, the town consists of hotels, churches, stores and residences. We introduced ourselves to the agent and made our business known. We found the agent to be a perfect gentleman. He received us kindly, at the same time intermingling us as to our mission and intentions. In answering our question, says Brother Rawlins, he assured us that there was nothing to prevent our preaching among the Indians. By courtesy of the gentleman we were introduced by letter to the superintendent of government schools. The superintendent also received us kindly and seemed to take pleasure in showing us through the various departments. One hundred and thirty pupils were progressing quickly under suitable management, all taught in English. Religion is a general way is taught morainge, but not holding to any particular faith. The three buildings are very creditable, one of which cost $38,000. The government has erected the houses on Osage lands. The order and discipline is good. Apparatus, furniture, etc., are of the most modern.

Catholicism reigns supreme on the agency as a religion, but from the statement of the agent, very little interest is being taken by the Indians in that faith. As a general rule the former customs and traditions are being abandoned. The peculiar custom is that of burying their dead. They used to set the deceased on a hill and pile rocks around them, kill their horses, and take food to them for nine days until the arrival of the spirit in the happy hunting grounds. The barbarous custom of sleeping has also been abandoned. Says an old Indian missionary, "They used to dig a pit in the ground to sleep in, and during the day keeps fire burning in it to warm the earth. In the evening they would rake out the coals and all the family would sleep in the pit and cover themselves over with a raw hide, the dogs on top would hold it down."

The Elders write under date of January 9, 1893, that they will be in Oklahoma in a few days. Their postoffice address is Manard, I. T. They are well and in the enjoyment of good spirits. The same can be said of all the Elders at present.
