Organization of Parliament.

PARIS, 14.—The Senate to-day elected the Duc d'Audiffret Pasquiere president; Martel and Duclerc, of the Left, and Gen. L'Admirault and Kerdrel, of the Right, vice-presidents. This result produced a sensation, as the Left desired the election of Jules Simon to the vice-presidency; he, however, obtained only 129 votes, while Kerdrel, the lowest successful candidate, received 152. Lapaigne, Rainneville and Vandier, of the Right, and Saint Valtrier and Scheurer Kistner, of the Left, were elected secretaries. The sixth secretary will be elected to-morrow. Boze and Desvignes, of the L'Auvergne faction, and General D'Aurelle de Paladines, of the Right Centre, were elected questors.

The Chamber of Deputies elected Grevy President, he receiving 462 votes against six. Civrac, of the Right Centre, and Bethmont, Rameau and Lepere, of the Left, were elected Vice-Presidents. Leon Gambetta proposed that eight secretaries be elected instead of six, in order to increase the representation of the majority. The proposition was accepted and Leon, a legitimist, Savory of the L'Avergne group, Lamy and Chieres, members of the Left Centre, and Cornot Fouviere and Clemenceau, of the Left, were elected; the eighth Secretary will be elected to-morrow. Gailly and Denfert Rochercan, of the Left, were elected questors, and two more will be ejected to-morrow. Ricard, who is without a seat, either in the Senate or Deputies, is resolved to resign his position as Minister of the Interior, unless he is elected to the life senatorship, vacant by the death of De Laroche.

Appointment.

M. Leon Say, minister of finance, at the request of the Khedive, has appointed M. Villett director of the Department in the French treasury to assist in the reorganization of the Egyptian finance ministry.

Ministerial Statement Read.

VERSAILLES, 14.—The ministerial statement was read, simultaneously in the Senate, to-day, and in the Chamber of Deputies, by M. Dufaure, in the former, and the Duc de Cases in the latter.

THE LONDON "TIMES."

Its Influence, Wisdom, and Independent Integrity.

[CONCLUDED.]

One of the immediate results of the abolition of the newspaper stamp was the establishment of the penny daily press in London. Previous to this period the lowest priced London daily paper was the Daily News, which was published at three pence, the Times, Morning Herald, and other morning papers were issued at five pence. The Daily Telegraph was the first of the London penny daily papers, having been established in June, 1855. It was succeeded, in 1856, by the Morning Star, and in June, 1857, by the Standard, which was, to some extent, a cheap edition of the Morning Herald, a paper dating from 1781, and which was discontinued a few years ago in consequence of the remarkable success achieved by the Standard. At first the penny papers each consisted of a large sheet of four pages, but on the repeal of the paper duty the size of the sheet became extended to eight pages. The Times, Morning Post, and other journals reduced their price from five pence to three pence. Subsequently the Daily News joined the ranks of the penny press; its circulation and influence became enormously increased thereby. In 1860 an attempt was made to establish a half-penny morning paper, under the name of Daily General Advertiser, but the experiment proved unsuccessful. Recently a morning edition of the Echo has been issued, with fair prospects of success. The difficulty of establishing new daily papers in London is illustrated by the failure of the Morning Star, Day, Iron Times, and similar ventures, each of which was commenced under what appeared very promising auspices. The number of metropolitan daily morning papers, at the present time, is thirteen. Of these five are published at three pence, one at two-pence half-penny, one at two pence, one [five] at one penny and one at a half-penny.

The Times, notwithstanding the formidable rivalry to which it has been exposed by the increase in the number and circulation of its contemporaries, has contrived to maintain its place as the most influential journal in the United Kingdom, the liberality and enterprise which mark its conduct being unparalleled in the annals of the newspaper press. It generally consists of a sheet and a half, forming twelve pages, but, during the sitting of Parliament, when the pressure on its columns is unusually heavy, each issue frequently consists of a double sheet, or sixteen pages. Sometimes it has been found necessary to make up a number consisting of two and a half sheets, or twenty pages, the price of the paper remaining the same. Advertisements form a conspicuous feature of the Times, the revenue from these being considerably in excess of that obtained by any other paper in the United Kingdom from a similar source, although no advertisement canvassers are employed, and all advertisements of an objectionable character are excluded. In fact, the censorship exercised by the Times over its advertising columns is of the strictest possible character; even the advertisements of professional betting men, money lenders, dealers in quack medicines, and the like, being refused insertion on any terms; the conduct of the Times in this respect favorably contrasts with that of the generality of newspapers.

But there is one feature in the Times that I have more than once referred to, its inflexible impersonality. Such a thing as a reply to a personal antagonist is as rare as an attack. Only the names of public men are mentioned in its editorial columns, and though their votes and measures are scrutinized, there is no malignity in the criticism, and no passion in the judgment. Nor is there any slavish adulation of parliament or the crown. More than once in the Times has spoken of the one with severe censure, and of the other with reckless reproach. It is often humorous, always liberal, frequently diplomatic, and sometimes equivocal, but through all there is the same fairness that marks a philosopher or a jurist. I may be called extravagant in this opinion, perhaps I have been swayed in reading it by the impartial correctness of the Times in its later reflections on American affairs. Some of its editorials would do credit to the pen of Junius, and all of them are stuffed with facts and figures. Of course there are mistakes, but not half as many as other London papers make when they write of English affairs. Nor are all these reflections praises. Our country is criticised boldly, and sometimes with angry severity. But the Times does not conceal our better side. It is not forever exposing our faults or our weaknesses. I confess that I often envy the possession of gigantic powers so gently yet so resistlessly wielded. Such a position requires immense self-control.

Nothing is so intoxicating as supremacy, whether in statesman or soldier, and nothing tempts to a more fatal recklessness than journalistic command. But in the London Times we have that golden mean, that wise restraint, and that independent integrity, never perceptible in small minds, and too rarely seen in those the world is in the habit of calling great.

J. M. MOORE, Postmaster.

But the Times does not conceal our better side. It is not forever exposing our faults or our weaknesses. I confess that I often envy the possession of gigantic powers so gently yet so resistlessly wielded. Such a position requires immense self-control.

Nothing is so intoxicating as supremacy, whether in statesman or soldier, and nothing tempts to a more fatal recklessness than journalistic command. But in the London Times we have that golden mean, that wise restraint, and that independent integrity, never perceptible in small minds, and too rarely seen in those the world is in the habit of calling great.
