EVENING NEWS.

Tuesday, - - June 27, 1882.

An Inventor's Story.

A stout, black-whiskered man sat immediately in front of me in the railroad car, and indulged from time to time in the most strange and unaccountable manœuvres. Every now and then he would get up, and hurry away to the narrow passage which leads to the door in these drawing-room cars; and when he thought himself secure from observation would fall to laughing in the most violent manner, and continue the healthful exercise until he was as red in the face as a lobster.

As we neared the city these demonstrations increased in violence, save that the stranger no longer ran away to laugh, but kept in his seat and chuckled to himself, with his chin down deep in his shirt collar. But the changes those portmanteaus underwent! He moved them here, there—he put them behind him. He was evidently getting ready to leave, but as we were twenty-five miles from the city, the idea of such early preparation was ridiculous. If we had entered the city then, the mystery would have remained unsolved, but the stranger became so excited that he could keep his seat no longer. Some one must help him, and as I was the nearest to him, he selected me. Suddenly turning, he said, rocking himself to and fro in his chair in the meantime, and slapping his legs together and breathing hard:

"Been gone three years!"

"Ah!"

"Yes, been in Europe. Folks don't expect me for three months yet, but I got through and started. I telegraphed them at the last station—They've got it by this time."

As he said this he rubbed his hands, and changed the portmanteau on his left to the right, and then one on the right to the left again.

"Got a wife?" said I.

"Yes, and three children;" he returned.

He then got up and folded his overcoat anew, and hung it over the back of the seat.

"You are pretty nervous over the matter, ain't you?" I said, watching his fidgety movements.

"Well I should think so," he replied, "I ain't slept soundly for a week. And you don't know," he went on, glancing around at the passengers and speaking in a low tone, "I am almost certain that this train will run off the track and break my neck before I get to Boston. Well, the fact is, I have had too much good luck for one man lately. The thing can't last; ain't natural the thing should, you know, I've watched it. First it rains, then it shines, then it rains again. It rains so hard you think it's never going to stop; then it shines so bright you think it's always going to shine; and just as you are settled in either belief, you are knocked over by a change, to show that you know nothing about it."

"Well, according to the philosophy," I said, "you will continue to have sunshine, because you are expecting a storm."

"It's curious," he returned, "but the only thing which makes me think I will get through safe is, because I think I won't."

"Well, this is curious," said I.

"Yes," he replied, "I am a machinist—made a discovery—nobody believed in it—spent all my money in trying to bring it out—mortgaged my home—all went. Everybody laughed at me—everybody but my wife—spunky little woman—said she would work her fingers off before I should give it up. Went to England—no better there—come within an ace of jumping off the London bridge. Went into a workshop to earn money enough to come home with—there I met the man I wanted. To make a long story short, I've brought $500,000 home with me, and here I am."

"Good for you," I exclaimed.

"Yes," said he, $500,000, and the best of it is she don't know anything about it. I've fooled her so often, and disappointed her so much, that I just concluded I would say nothing about this. When I got my money, though, you better believe I struck a bee line for home."

"And now, I suppose, you will make her happy."

"Happy!" he replied, "why you don't know anything about it. She's worked like a dog since I have been gone, trying to support herself and children decently. They paid her 18 cents apiece for making white shirts, and that is the way she lived half the time. She'll come down there to the depot to meet me in a gingham dress and a shawl a hundred years old, and she'll think she's dressed up. Oh, she won't have no clothes after this—oh, no, I guess not!"

And with these words, which implied that his wife's wardrobe would soon rival Queen Victoria's, the stranger tore down the passage-way again, and getting in his old corner, where he thought himself out of sight, went through the strangest pantomime, laughing, putting his mouth into the drollest shape, and then swinging himself back and forth in the limited space as if he were "walking down Broadway" a full-rigged metropolitan belle.

So on we rolled into the depot, and I placed myself on the other car, opposite the stranger, who with a portmanteau in his hand, descended and was standing on the lowest step ready to jump to the platform.

I looked from his face to the faces of the people before us, but saw no sign of recognition. Suddenly he cried:

"There they are!"

Then he laughed outright, but in a hysterical sort of way, as he looked over the crowd. I followed his eye, and saw some distance back, as if crowded out and shouldered away by the well dressed and elbowing throng, a little woman in a faded dress, and a well-worn hat, with a face almost painful in its intense but hopeful expression, glancing rapidly from window to window as the coaches rapidly glided in.

She had not yet seen the stranger, but a moment after she caught his eye, and in another instance he had jumped to the platform with his two portmanteaus, and making a hole in the crowd, pushing one here and another there, and running one of his bundles plump into the well-developed stomach of a venerable looking old gentleman in spectacles, he rushed towards the place where she was standing. I think I never saw a face assume so many different expressions in so short a time as did that of the little woman while her husband was on his way to her.

She didn't look pretty—on the contrary, she looked very plain; but somehow I felt a big lump rise in my throat as I watched her. She was trying to laugh, but God bless her, how completely she failed in the attempt! Her mouth got into position, but it never moved after that save to draw down at the corners and quiver, while she blinked her eyes so fast that I expect she only caught occasional glimpses of the broad-shouldered man pushing his way so rapidly towards her. And, then, as he drew close and dropped those everlasting portmanteaus, she just turned completely round, with her back towards him, and covered her face with her hands. And thus she was when the strong man gathered her up in his arms as if she had been a baby, and held her, sobbing, to his breast.

There were enough gaping at them, Heaven knows, and I turned my eyes away a moment, and then I saw two boys in threadbare roundabouts standing near, wiping their eyes and noses in their little coat-sleeves, and bursting out anew at every fresh demonstration on the part of their mother.

When I looked at the stranger again, he had his hat drawn over his eyes; but his wife was looking up at him, and it seemed as if the pent-up tears of those weary months of waiting were streaming through her eyelids.

A Primitive Community.

There exists high up among the Carpathian Mountains of Galicia, in a district known as Tatras, one of the most primitive and unsophisticated communities in Europe. The population of this remote region numbers several thousand individuals. They neither use strong drink nor eat animal food. Riches have no charm for them. Though poor, they are content, and, though their diet is spare and monotonous, they enjoy perfect health and live long lives. The food of these Arcadians is principally oats, either simply boiled or ground and converted into cakes. During four or five months of the year those of them who accompany their flocks and herds to the mountain pastures live exclusively on goat-milk whey, of which each man consumes nearly a gallon daily.

Practically, therefore, these goat-herds live on the sugar and the mineral salts contained in the whey. They do not consider this regimen a privation, and when they return to the valleys at the end of the season they are as strong and as vigorous as when they set out. The entire race of Podhalians, as the people of Tatras are called, are remarkable for their vigor and energy, and are incontestibly superior, physically and intellectually to the neighboring population. Their physique is of a remarkable purity; they are quick of apprehension and frank in manner. Though far from being highly cultured, the Podhalians are poets and artists by nature. They are fond of dancing, and often when the labors of the day are over, meet to indulge in their favorite diversion. They are born improvisatores, too, and many of them can sing their own songs set to music of their own composition.

Didn't Have To.

It is related of a Maryland deacon whose peaches are first in the New York market that, having company at his farm house one evening recently, a terrific thunder storm came on and shook things up worse than an explosion in a crockery store. Everybody was thoroughly frightened, and directly after a blinding flash one of the visitors anxiously asked:

"Friends, don't you think we had better kneel and ask for protection?"

"No, brother Jones; no," protested the deacon, "I have just had a lightning rod put on the house at an expense of $36, and I propose we hold off and give her a fair show to do business.

Commander J. B. Coghlan, U. S. N., stationed at Mare Island, Cal., writes that he was subject to the most painful attacks of rheumatism, which totally unfitted him for the responsible duties of his Office. Eminent naval and other surgeons failed to afford the slightest relief, until Dr. Hoyle recommended St. Jacobs Oil, which effected a complete and wonderful cure.
