LITTLE THINGS IN THE SPARE ROOM.

A Few Articles That Will Make Your Visitors Say How Pleasant.

And that spare room—is it heated? If it isn't, have you put a sufficiency of clothing on the bed? I was once a visitor at a place where I was expected to sleep in the middle of winter, under nothing beyond a sheet and a counterpane. If I hadn't known of an old physician's recipe for keeping the feet warm on a cold bed I should certainly have sat up all night. This simple remedy is the putting of an extra pillow under the sheet, on that part of the mattress where the feet will press. It is infallible, and worth remembering. But as all guests have not such ideas at call, be sure there are plenty of extra coverlids in the guest room.

See that the window curtains are presentable, and that your guest knows how to manage them. Nothing is so unpleasant for a visitor as to be compelled to pin articles of clothing to the window frames because the curtain won't come down, or to experiment with scanty working curtain fixtures at 12 o'clock the night after the party. Be sure there are the following articles in the room, however small: Some good soap, a large jug of fresh water, a clean glass for drinking water, a supply of towels, both fine and coarse, to suit all tastes.

On the toilet table place a hand glass, a pair of small scissors for cleaning nails, clipping hangs, etc.; a bowl of wooden toothpicks, so that your guest can make use of these necessary articles without offending your taste at the table. Be sure the pincushion is well supplied with pins, and that there is an easy, soft cushioned rocking chair in the room.

Supply the bed with plenty of pillows. If any one does not use them they are easily removed, and some people cannot sleep unless well bolstered up. In the room place a bottle of black ink, some note paper and envelopes, a medium sized steel pen in a holder, two or three stamps and a postal card or so. Not you say, why should I supply my guests with postage and stationery?

Your guests, I am sure, will always see that when they leave the stock of stamps and paper in your spare room is by no means diminished, and how convenient the handy supply will be to your visitor when, on the morning of her arrival, she wants to drop a line to her friends at home, and has not yet learned the way to the local postoffice. Also place in the guest chamber a few entertaining novels—Edith Minter in Housekeeper.

For Those Who Ride Bicycles.

Ladies who ride the wheel can be counted by the hundreds, but that their ranks are rapidly increasing is an assured fact.

Of those who ride many do so gracefully, but there are some, not a few, who sit their wheels in a manner so ungainly as to draw the attention and comment of the passers-by, thus hindering the use of cycles among ladies to a great extent.

Now, any lady can look well on a wheel if she will (and knows how), but the trouble seems to be that a great number are turned out of the riding schools too soon without the proper instruction, the finishing touches of their cycling education being in most cases entirely neglected, and it is a chance that such is the case. At these schools the pupil is taught to struggle about in a yard (much too small in many cases) and mount and dismount after a fashion.

Here their instructions seem to cease to an end, and just where it is most needed, her then is the time the rider should be taught to ride with her saddle well forward and with handlebar so arranged that she will not have always to grasp it, and have the bar so high that she is made to hunch the shoulders. Nor should she ride with arms so long that the movement of the elbow is too marked, or with cranks so short that nearly all power is lost by having too little leverage.

The beginner, of course, cannot see herself, and if she did, without the proper instructions, would not know how to ride more gracefully.

If my sisters who ride the wheel will remember these few hints they will be sure to look well.

Have your saddle well forward over the pedals, sit erect, raising the handle bar just high enough so you can easily reach it, without leaning forward, using six-inch cranks for country riding and five-inch for city, and use the ankle movement, keeping the knee well in.—Washington Star.

A Fitted Socialist.

"Compliments of Miss Dollie Dutton, for Wednesday evening, March 11, at 9 p. m. Fitted socialist."

"Now what," mused I, "may be the gist of a 'Fitted socialist?'"

As one from one to learn I bethought me that it might be as well to find out by experiment.

When the guests had all assembled in Miss Dollie's spacious parlors, we were informed that twenty small articles had been hidden in various places in the parlors and hall, and a list of them was read aloud. They consisted of various tops, scissors, knives, watch keys, whistles and a number of small boxes filled with tiny buttons. There were two first prizes, one to be given to the lady, the other to the gentleman finding the greatest number of articles. For the first was a quaint little coffee spoon, with gold bowl and curiously wrought enchased handle; a photograph holder was to reward like skill on the part of some gentleman. Should any one fail to find a single article he or she was to be rewarded with a booby prize.

Then the fun began. From vases and vase jars, from folds of portieres and window curtains, from beneath low easy chairs and hassocks, from behind pictures, and in short from all likely and unlikely places, some of them having been secreted away with an ingenuity that was almost disheltered, the "lost" things were brought to light and reported to the committee until at last one small article remained unfound—the tiny gold thimble that fitted, but seldom adorned, Miss Dollie's pretty pink digit. This was finally discovered in the hat of one of the guests which hung innocently in the proper place on the hat rack.—New York Herald.

Cooling Off the Old Love.

An Arab woman, when left a widow, mourns her husband decently, but, like other widows, if she has the opportunity she may be married again. The sight before her second marriage she pays a visit to her husband's grave. There she kneels and prays him not to be offended. As however, she from he will be offended, the widow brings with her a donkey laden with two goatskins filled with water. The prayer ended, she proceeds to pour the water on the grave to keep the first husband cool under the circumstances about to take place, and having well saturated him she then departs.—Iowa State Register.

Vanities for Sore Throat.

For a sore or raw throat without much inflammation no medical, soothing, cool, least application is vaseline. A lump the size of a hazel nut should be taken into the mouth, and as it melts, which it does almost instantly, it should be allowed to trickle slowly back and down the throat.

The finishing of a dress is the most important part. Nothing is more absurd fictory than a dress only half put together. There are no doubts in market that stretch so little that a well fitted dress stays in place and does not get out of shape with wear.

WIFE OF A BONAPARTE.

HISTORY OF THE FAMILY OF NAPOLEON'S YOUNG BROTHER.

How the General and Emperor Became Connected with American Relatives. Betsy Patterson's Peculiar Position in French History.

The late Prince Napoleon was the son of Jerome, the youngest brother of Napoleon the Great. This fact brings nearer to us that great series of events beginning with "a whiff of grapeshot" and ending with Waterloo. His death, moreover, has a peculiar civic interest for Americans, because it recalls the story of the first love of his father, Jerome, for a young American girl, Betsy Patterson, of Baltimore.

It is a sad tale of romance, imperial ambition and diplomacy. Napoleon had already won undying fame in Italy when his young brother, Jerome, was but twelve years of age. He soon entered the French navy, for it was his great brother's ambition to make of him a fighter on the seas fit to rope with Nelson. It was an English frigate that intervened to his plan by driving the French frigate bearing Jerome into American waters. At Baltimore Jerome fell madly in love with and married Elizabeth, the beautiful daughter of William Patterson, a rich merchant, and an Irishman by birth. Elizabeth, or Betsy, as she was called, had a consuming ambition, and when friends opposed the marriage she said, "I would rather be the wife of a brother of Napoleon Bonaparte than the wife of any other man living for life."

Napoleon was highly displeased with this match, because he already saw himself on the throne and wished his brothers to marry only royal blood. Jerome and his wife only learned of the establishment of the empire when about to sail from New York to beg the forgiveness of the first monarch. They found on the same vessel that both Jerome and his brother, Louis, were delivered from the line of succession for marrying against Napoleon's wishes. Nor withstanding the young couple, still hoping forgiveness and advancement, sailed for Lisbon in 1803.

HISTORY OF "NO."

There Jerome was arrested and taken to France, after a tearful adieu and protestations of everlasting fidelity to his wife, who was not allowed to land. She sent a message to the emperor which tickled him immensely.

"Tell the emperor," she said, "that Mme. Bonaparte demands her rights as a member of the imperial family."

She proceeded to England, where a boy was soon born to her and christened Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte. Jerome, the father, proceeded to Paris, little thinking that he would never see Betsy again save as a stranger and with another wife upon his arm.

Napoleon positively refused to recognize the marriage, but promised Betsy an annual pension of $20,000, providing she would return to America and renounce the name of Bonaparte, which conditions she accepted.

Her husband, Jerome, thus separated from her, was compelled by his brother to marry Catharine, the daughter of the king of Wurtemburg. Soon after he was made king of Westphalia. He then sent to America for Betsy's child, "Bo"—an abbreviation of Bonaparte. She refused to give him up, and in reply to the offer from her husband of a dismissal, with an income of $40,000 a year, she sent back the scornful message: "Westphalia is too small for two queens; besides, I already receive $20,000 a year from the emperor, and I would rather be protected by the wings of the eagle than be dependent on the bill of a goose."

She ever afterward spoke with contempt of her husband, although "Bo" frequently visited his father-family in Europe, where he was treated as a son and a brother, his half sister, Princess Matilda, being especially fond of him. Afterward "Bo" married a Baltimore lady, causing his mother, Madame Betsy, great anger by doing so. His cousin, Emperor Napoleon III, invited him to France, where he was legitimized and received as a member of the family. His half brother, the son of Jerome by Catharine, quarreled with the emperor, and there was at one time a strong intention to make "Bo" the heir presumptive, but ultimately "Bo" was declared ineligible.

BETSY'S POSITION.

He declined a dukedom, refusing the condition attached of surrendering the name of Bonaparte. On the death of King Jerome in 1860 his American wife, Betsy Patterson, contested his will. She was, however, refused a share of his property.

The letters show a great contempt for her entire land. She wrote to her father from Florence in 1829 as follows:

"A parent cannot make a silk purse of a sow's ear, and you know that you could not make a sow's ear of a silk purse. It was impossible to bend my talents and my ambition to the obscure destiny of a Baltimore housekeeper. It was absurd to attempt it after I had married the brother of an emperor. I had not the mentions of spirit to descend from such elevation to the diplomatic condition of being the wife of an American.

"I often tried to reason myself into the marriage ceremony of Baltimore, which when I contemplated a long life to be passed in a trading town, where everything was disgusting to my tastes, and where everything contrasted so strongly with my wishes.

"I never could have degraded myself by marriage with people who, after I had married a prince, thought my inferior.

"The Americans themselves had sense and good taste enough to feel that I had been above them, and they have always treated me with the respect and deference due to a superior.

"When I first heard that my son could marry an American any one in Baltimore I nearly went mad.

"I repent that I would have starved, died, rather than marry any one in Baltimore."

In her old age Betsy's constant companions were a carpet bag and a red umbrella, the color of the Napoleonic dynasty. "Bo" died in 1876. His mother survived till 1879, dying at the age of ninety-four years, and leaving a fortune of $1,000,000 to Bo's two sons, Jerome Napoleon and Charles J. Bonaparte.

Charles J. married Miss Nellie Day, of Boston, who is a granddaughter of Mr. James C. Dunn, a merchant of Boston.—Philadelphia Press.

THE CRY OF MILLIONS

OH, MY BACK! STOP IT NOW, SOON IT WILL BE TOO LATE.

I have been troubled over years with disease of the kidneys and have tried many different remedies and spent much money and time, without obtaining relief. About the 15th of April I was suffering from a very severe attack (let someone photograph me in such a manner as to show the pain I was in) when I read about THE GREGORY KIDNEY TEA. As soon as I read the testimonials, I commenced using the tea. It had an immediate beneficial effect, and to the astonishment of all the people at the Bakery, in a few days I was heard to say that you could not make a sow's ear of a silk purse. It was impossible to bend my talents and my ambition to the obscure destiny of a Baltimore housekeeper. It was absurd to attempt it after I had married the brother of an emperor. I had not the mentions of spirit to descend from such elevation to the diplomatic condition of being the wife of an American.

A Warning To Horse-Owners.

The Split Nail in this shoe seriously lamed the horse from which it was removed. It taken to Worcester, Mass. One point of the nail came out in the proper place for clinching, and so deceived the blacksmith who shod the horse. The other point went in the direction shown in the illustration, piercing the tender part of the foot called the "quick," from which the horse was made lame for one nearly two weeks.

This nail is sold on the same terms as other nails, and is equally as good except for the single point, which is liable to be mistaken for a DANGEROUS nail. The Putnam Nail Co. offers to pay $100 for information of any person, firm or corporation selling or using a Split Nail, or some Screw Point Nail.

The Putnam Nail

CANNOT SPLIT, SLIVER OR BREAK,

It is the only Hot-Forged and Hammer-Pointed Horseshoe Nail in the World made by machinery in precisely the same manner as the old-fashioned hand-made nail.

WHY THE DESERET NEWS SHOULD BE SUBSCRIBED FOR IN PREFERENCE TO ANY OTHER PAPER.

1. It is the Organ of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and the authorized medium through which the views, wishes and instructions of the Church Authorities are expressed, and given to the Saints.

2. It may always be relied upon as advocating or defending the right side of every question proper for public journals to treat upon.

3. It is devoted to the interests of the Latter-day Saints, and has, from its inception, valiantly defended their rights and advocated the principles in which they believe; and every Latter-day Saint should therefore feel under obligations to do his part in helping to sustain it.

4. It is not published for speculation, and never has been, but for the good which it is capable of accomplishing; the profits, if any there be derived from it, being devoted to extending its sphere of usefulness, and benefiting the community.

5. It is doing its utmost to establish home industries, among which are paper making and type-founding, stereotyping and electrotyping—branches necessary to the development and independence of the community, but which, during their infancy (which in this Territory they have not yet passed), can only be carried on at a pecuniary loss.

6. There is no danger of any subscriber to the News failing to get what he subscribes for through failure of the business and a suspension of the publication—a result in the case of hundreds of newspaper ventures every year.

7. It is now printed throughout in new and readable type, so that even the aged can peruse it without difficulty or danger to their eyesight.

8. It is free from objectionable advertisements, so that no parent need fear that his children will have their minds corrupted from having access to it; in fact, it refuses thousands of dollars worth of the best paying advertisements annually, because it is devoted to the moral and spiritual interests of its readers instead of to getting gain at their expense.

9. Its tone is not regulated by public opinion nor the hope of gaining subscribers or advertisements. It advocates that which is right and condemns that which is wrong, regardless of results, financial or otherwise.

10. It never amuses its readers by palming off columns of sell-praise for news items.

11. The News practices no deception and resorts to no subterfuges to induce people to subscribe, but on the contrary, prefers to stand on its own merits as the people's newspaper, with a promise only to do its utmost to give its patrons the full value of their money—a promise which it has endeavored to faithfully keep in the past.

12. In conclusion, if a Latter-day Saint can afford to subscribe for only one newspaper, that paper should be the Deseret News; and if more than one, the News should invariably be the first.
