THE RESULT AND ITS CAUSES.

The hopes which men have entertained respecting an election have much to do with their surprise, or lack of it, at the result. In the present instance, many who have felt that the Democratic party was unjustly blamed for the evils that have recently afflicted the country, and have believed that this injustice has been made apparent to the voters, will be surprised as well as disappointed at the reverses with which that party has met. On the other hand, a voter who is unbiased as between the national parties, and sufficiently intelligent to comprehend conditions existing throughout the country can see that the party now in power in the nation has labored under tremendous disadvantages during this campaign. The calamity howler has had the opportunity of a lifetime, and he has made the most of it.

This one fact will go very far towards accounting for the signal success of the Republican party, even in districts where, under normal conditions, the Democrats have a strong majority. The panic swept over the country soon after the inauguration of Cleveland, and the two events have been so associated in the minds of the masses as to give Republicans a tremendous leverage on the stump. The News is not in politics, and therefore will not undertake to say how much there was of justice, or whether there was any at all, in thus connecting the present administration with the financial troubles from which the country has suffered.

A glance at the returns from all over the Union is sufficient to explain the result in Utah. Wm. Wilson, the blat and standard bearer of the national Democracy, is defeated in his own state, a southern one at that, is it a matter of astonishment that the Democratic candidate for Congress in Utah should fall of election? The wool, lead and sugar industries are vital in this Territory, and the representations that have been made that they would continue to suffer under Democratic rule, but that they would prosper with a return to power of the Republican party, have had great weight with the Utah voter. Whether or not they were entitled to any weight at all, it is not the province of this paper to express an opinion.

In speaking thus we are aiming to give rational reasons for the result, in order that charges to the effect that improper methods have been resorted to in this Territory to accomplish it, may be forestalled before they can take root in the credence of the public. The Democracy of Utah made a splendid fight, and when they compare the results of the election in this Territory with the returns from New York, West Virginia, Ohio and many other states, they may well feel proud of the results they have made. They have fully held their own, which is more than can be said of their party almost anywhere else in the Union.

From the neutral point of view which the News has occupied while watching the campaign in Utah, it has appeared to be an unusually square, manly fight on both sides, resulting in profound conviction on the part of the voter as to which ticket he should support at the polls; and we believe that very few ballots have been cast from any other motive except such a conviction. Charges of corruption, ballot-box stuffing, or illegality of any kind in connection with the election in Utah will have to be backed up by at least plausible evidence before we will give credence to them.

We should have been pleased to see the two national parties equal in strength in our commonwealth, conviction, especially if the best men on both sides were born were elected, regardless of religion or politics. It would, in our view, have been better to make that body quite non-partisan, and the next best thing would have been to make it as nearly equal in the strength of the two parties as possible. We regret the boys that no man who is nominated a member of it will feel that he goes in as a partisan, or to give to the proposed charter a partisan color.

TO RESCUE THE FALLEN.

The ladies who met yesterday, November 5th, in one of the churches of this city for the purpose of establishing a home for fallen women deserve a word of encouragement in the philanthropic work they have undertaken. Institutions of this kind have been erected in several places and accomplished much good, notwithstanding the great difficulties they necessarily have to overcome. Experienced laborers among the lower strata of society are familiar with the fact that a great many unfortunate Magdalenes remain in a state of degradation simply because they see no way out of it. The glittering allurements of sin which first led them on, soon lose their lustre, and the deceived victims would gladly return, but they a friendly hand to guide them on the way to virtue. It is not claimed that this is the case with all, nor perhaps with a majority of them, but still there remains a large number who willingly would cling to a saving hand held out to them in sympathy. To find such and to save them from eternal ruin is a work society would seem to be under obligations to perform, considering the conditions existing nearly everywhere in the civilized world.

It is a matter worthy of serious contemplation that human wisdom has been unable to deal with this social problem in a satisfactory manner. As far back as history goes the miserable figure meets our gaze in all grades of civilization, in all nations. The united efforts of moralists, prohibitory laws and severe punishments have failed. And now after ages of experiments and futile efforts, some philanthropists are ready to acknowledge society defeated and are beginning to look upon the evil as necessary. They seem to think that the sacrifice of some of God's fairest children on the altar of lust is required for the preservation of the rest. It is needless to say that such views are unworthy of consideration. Rather, the conclusion is near at hand that there must be something radically wrong in society itself where such a condition can remain. Repeated defeats in the battle against vice are certainly no proof that it is invincible; such defeats may indicate that the tactics are wrong, or that the forces employed are too weak. Vice and sin are certainly controllable, and eradicable from the human heart, provided the right remedies are applied. Hence the hope is well founded that a society will at last find the proper way of treating all the ills under which it now suffers. Legislation has its work to perform in this direction; to philanthropy another part of the task is entrusted; and when both operate together and in harmony with the principles of true Christianity success is insured.

CHURCH UNITY.

Union of churches seems to be a leading topic in the Catholic world at present. A conference in Rome is now being held, probably for the purpose of agreeing upon a feasible plan of healing the breach between the Eastern and Western churches, and in a recent sermon Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, asserted that there was a yearning desire for a reunion of the Protestants and Catholics. He said he was in possession of numerous letters from Protestant clergymen inquiring about the probable basis of reconciliation and added that the conditions of reunion would be much easier than generally imagined.

In fact, Eastern churches have stubbornly resisted all attempts to unite with Western religions. Greek patriarchs refused to listen to the overtures of Melancthon, and regarded both Lutheranism and Calvinism as more dangerous heresies. The Anglican bishops were once curtly told that the only conditions on which their proposition could be considered was the adoption by the English church of all the creeds and confessions of the Greeks "with alacrity and obedience and without any scruple or dispute." The Old Catholic Congress held recently in Bonn in 1874 had to do much, because the Eastern prelates refused to yield a single point, although the Old Catholics agreed to yield to them the doctrine of the procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father alone. Judging from these repeated failures, the efforts now put forth do not seem to promise great results, unless the sentiment should have changed considerably. The Greeks hold on to the supremacy of the Eastern star with as much tenacity as the Romans cling to the papal see, and it seems will yield, there can be no union.

As to the Protestants, it is not known that there is any strong movement moving in the direction of Rome. So much, Cardinal Gibbons has reported the letters he speaks of. But they only prove, what is no secret to observers of the signs of the times, that individual students of theology are beginning to grow tired of their futile efforts to find some consistency in the Protestant systems of theology, and are looking about for something more satisfactory. That some of them should embrace Catholicism is natural enough, while others swing to various forms of rationalism. Still, although the Protestant churches are hardly yet prepared to return in bodies to the mother church, it is perfectly conceivable that this will some time happen. The Catholics have a more perfect organization; a logically more correct theology; a service that speaks to the senses and through all the outward senses, and various institutions well adapted to the needs of the people. It is therefore not impossible that her superiority over Protestantism should at some time be more generally recognized than it is at present, notwithstanding her fault and deviations from the original Church.

It is evident, however, that no true and lasting union of religious denominations can be effected on any basis now proposed. As long as churches build on doctrines originated by human wisdom alone, there will be schisms and divisions and strife and contentions without number. Could the leaders of men realize the necessity of starting under Divine guidance, as did the great interpreters of the word of God of old; could they all agree to shake from their systems what has not been given from heaven and then unite on the rock of revelation, there would be a firm basis to build upon. The Church would then have that power without which her mission on earth cannot be accomplished. To labor for unity on the basis of the enlistment of faith of one denomination or another does not seem worth the trouble; it is like building a house of sand where the waves continually wash the beach. Union on the basis of Divine revelation is the aim of Heaven and the mission of the true Church on earth.

DEFEAT OF TAMMANY.

It is to be hoped that the defeat of Tammany is decisive and permanent. For a generation or more that organization has been an incubus upon the Democratic party, not only in New York city and state, but to a certain extent in the nation, and it has wrought untold harm. In its government of the metropolis, which it has controlled to municipal affairs much of the time since it became a political factor—it has been tyrannical and corrupt, and to a remarkable degree oblivious of the rights and best interests of the citizens. In state and presidential elections it has been arrogant and dictatorial, and it has exerted a powerful and baneful influence in both state and national politics. The Democratic party and the whole United States will be the gainers by the complete annihilation of this sanguinary organization.

Connected with the defeat of Tammany is a feature that looks like retribution. Last year David B. Hill sat in the United States Senate, exercising the power of an autocrat, and coolly defeating important measures sent to by President Cleveland. Yesterday, largely owing to the return of his leader to council and, David B. Hill was overwhelmingly crushed at the polls as the Democratic candidate for governor. The humiliation of being beaten himself in Hill, although he was reelected to run, and success would have necessitated the resignation of his seat in the United States Senate. As the principal leader of Tammany, his defeat for the governorship breaks his own political power as well as that of the organization of which he has been chief, and time only can tell whether it will survive.

Real Political Issues
WHILE TRYING TO SOLVE THEIR PERSONAL BUSINESS SHOULD ALSO BE REMEMBERED, LIKE JUDGE COLBURN AND POPPERTON'S PLACE "ALL IS SAFE."
In these days of political strife people are apt to become so engrossed in discussing the merits of their respective parties and their respective candidates, that they might continue, business and family. Thomas R. Webster intended to a sermon, "Strange men [illegible] their friends that they forgot their standing!" and the truth of the assertion is very apparent in this city at the present time, and a word of caution may not come amiss, and all those who prefer to discuss their opinions by a fire, then in the afternoon, we did remember the advice of the gamester to his friend "Never make a bet he could not afford to lose," which if properly heeded would make election bets very few indeed. But if you must bet, bet some useful article and not cash, that the winner is in—not to lose to Blomgren and he wins the better off for having won. We would suggest a suit or Clothes or an Overcoat (and we are not averse to becoming stakeholders). The winner would be made happy and comfortable, make a respectable appearance when making application for a job in the gift of his favorite candidate, and the loser would not be bled nearly so badly in paying a wager at the very moderate price for which we are selling handsome clothing from him, and the winner can carry away a suit of clothes from $10 to $20 worth—nearly five hundred styles of cloth to select from.
