TELLS THE JURY ALL.

Mrs. Hutchinson Takes the Witness Stand and Recites Her Life.

TRY TO PROVE HEREDITARY INSANITY.

She Breaks Down and Revels Into Details—Her Testimony Will Admit of No Cross-Examination.

The prosecution in the Hutchinson case rested shortly after 10 o'clock this morning, when the defense placed the defendant on the stand, where she has been for the most part of today. Mrs. Hutchinson bore an remarkably well under the trying ordeal, and only once did she manifest any sign of breaking down and that was when she was relating her experience in Dallas, Texas. Usually proper in control her feelings, she burst into tears and it was several seconds before she was able to proceed with her statement. Owing to Mrs. Hutchinson's peculiar condition and her rapid manner of talking a great deal of what she said could not be understood.

Up to a late hour this afternoon, the defendant was still under direct examination, and the probabilities are that the case will not reach the jury until late tomorrow afternoon or Saturday morning.

After the "News" report closed yesterday the examination of Mrs. V. H. Mathis was proceeded with. The witness corroborated the testimony of her son and daughter with respect to the robbery and described a number of violent attacks.

Chief of Police Pratt told of the defendant's confession on the day of her arrest. He also related a conversation he had with Mrs. Hutchinson at the county jail. "She asked me at the time," said the chief, "what they would do with her if her attorneys put in the defense of insanity. I told her that she would be sent to the insane asylum, unless, probably, she asked for how long, and I said until she was forgotten. She shuddered at that and said, 'I'd rather be in the penitentiary.'"

Detective George A. Sheets told of his conversation with Mrs. Hutchinson after confession and the recovery of the stolen property.

Detective Mooney Ollington corroborated Chief Pratt and Mr. Sheets, when court adjourned.

This morning Chief Pratt and Mrs. Mathis were recalled and examined on matters of minor importance when Mr. Putnam announced, "We rest."

THE DEFENDANT'S STORY.

The defendant then rose from her seat and after removing her veil took the witness stand. She said her name was Flora H. Hutchinson and she was born in Rhuyl, North Wales, on the 4th of October, 1862. Her maiden name was Thompson. Her father then proceeded to give a biographical sketch of her ancestry, the purpose of it being to prove that they were of a nervous and hysterical temperament, which she had inherited.

Mr. Van Cott objected to the witness telling of what her mothers, uncles, aunts and cousins died of, unless it came within the realm of her own personal knowledge. The method and of this would be hearsay and therefore incompetent.

Mr. Smith said the object of the testimony was to prove the taint of insanity in the defendant's antecedents and that according to the rule of evidence what one had lived through some member of a family as to how another member of the family died or died without competent testimony.

Mr. Van Cott contended that the proferred testimony was pedigree and insisted that for the defendant or to tell what another member of the family had died for was to have some other member of the family died, was utterly incompetent. The court sustained the objection.

The defendant then proceeded to relate her own observations and experience with the family on both her father's and mother's side. Her father, she said, was for years under the unpropitious influence of his family who became insane. It was a delusion on his part. He wouldn't talk to his children and didn't want them to talk to him. All of his brothers died in jail or in asylums under a nervous and excitable nature. At 18 years of age, the defendant said, she lost sight in both of her eyes and was blind for three years. Experts told her family that she couldn't possibly live.

She married David Joseph Hutchinson, a lieutenant in the English army, when in her twenty-third year. They lived together in England and New York until June, 1891. Her husband died in a hospital in New York on January 12, 1892. She said her married life was a most unhappy one and that her husband was an inhospitable, extravagant and dissipated man.

The defendant then told of her arrival in New York in company with her husband and child. This was in the spring of 1891. Her husband couldn't find anything to do and squandered her. She was in a delicate state of health on arriving in New York and shortly afterwards gave birth to a child, which lived but a few days. They then came to Dallas, Texas, where she learned of her husband's death in San Francisco. She then returned to England and was successful in getting into the Eastern hospital in London, where she remained for two years and a half graduating as nurse. About six weeks before entering the hospital she attempted suicide by taking chloroform, had on several occasions been fearful of becoming insane. She returned to this country in the summer of 1896. She came to Salt Lake City in the summer of 1896. The defendant then told of the people at Bear Rivers, who had performed the duties of nurse, her thieving proclivities and the articles she had stolen. There was not a single article she had not taken. The defendant admitted having taken a spoon from Mrs. C. H. Crisler, a gold pin from Mrs. Wilkins, Nabb, spectacles from another place and spoon glasses from another. Asked as to how she took them she said she thought they attracted her attention and she could not resist the temptation and desire to possess them.

The defendant was asked if there were any houses she had visited from which she had not taken something and her answer was in the affirmative. She might have overlooked one or two, she said, would remember her the moment about whether or not she had taken anything.

Continuing defendant said she had been depressed in spirits ever since her arrival in Salt Lake City, so much so that had not the means not would have returned to Texas on boat after her arrival.

Mrs. Hutchinson also claimed to have lost a watch and chain and a butcher knife from the Mathis residence. This was sometime during the month of June. The Mathis's also had her suspicions about taking up the house. She had returned on her to 6 o'clock at night and found the Hotel door open as well as her own door.

She had responsible responsible Mrs. Mathis to keep her door locked.

Defendant said she took Mrs. Hoyt's watch away from the day after she received it. It was about 11 o'clock in the forenoon. She placed it on a shelf upstairs intending it should remain there until she did not know what possessed her to take the movement away with her, as she had no desire for such articles. She was sorry that there was no intention on her part to dispose of them.

The defendant was still giving her direct testimony when the "News" report closed.

An Incorrigible in Court.

Lorenzo Edgar, a 15-year-old boy, was before Judge Norrell this afternoon to show cause why he should not be sent to the State Industrial School for reformation.

The boy was recently before Justice Nelson for petty larceny, and it was hoped that on the 20th ult. he came up from Charles C. Crate.

The boy's parents stated that they could do nothing with him.

Principal William Bradford, of the Jackson school, said Lorenzo was a bad boy; that he was guilty of swearing and stealing, and was unfit to associate with other boys.

The youthful defendant took the stand and said he didn't like going to school. He would, however, prefer going there to be that and said, "I'd rather be in the penitentiary."

Asked if he would do better, Judge Norrell advised Lorenzo to go home with his parents, and if in thirty days he shows an improvement, he will, in all likelihood, be paroled.

The complaint sets out that on the 21st of November, 1896, plaintiff was in the employ of defendants, who were in the capacity of salesmen. When a package carrier fell striking her on top of the head, causing severe and permanent injuries. It is also alleged that there was a defect in the appliance on which the basket was operated and it constituted a nuisance for which she charged against the defendants for not warning their clerks of the danger.

The trial had not concluded at press time.

RESCUED THE UTAH BOYS.

A Discharged Volunteer Returns From Manila and Will Visit His Sister.

William H. H. Rodgers, a soldier belonging to the Twenty-third United States Infantry, reached Salt Lake from Manila this morning. He enlisted in Texas, and was discharged from the service on account of physical disability. He is on his way to visit his sister, A. W. Wolf, of Wallsburg, Utah. He said he talked with some of the Utah boys before leaving the Philippines. Most of them were in good health and doing well. In the battle of August 13th, he said that his regiment dashed up to the support of the Utah boys just in time to save them. A number had been made in an order, and the Eighteenth United States Infantry, which was shipped to the Philippines, was ordered to come up to the scene of the wrecked road and came up on the left.

The Twenty-third had a long run which lasted 36 hours. Rodgers said he just reached the battlefield in the nick of time. He said the Utah boys fought that day like demons. Mr. Rodgers leaves for his sister's home this evening.

TOLD AROUND THE STOVE.

It was a cold morning. The boys were all huddled around the stove at the service station discussing everything from politics to religion, when one spoke up and ventured a story as what he came out when he was a bit of a lad, ten two years of age. "Aw, come off," hooted Sheets as he cast aside the paper he had in the discussion. "Do you mean to tell me that you can remember things you did when you were ten two years old?" "I can," chimed in Bill Davis as the detective held the gentleman spoken to at defiance. "Maybe you did the thing you say you did, I remember when that Theater was being built," confided Davis. "I was just a little fellow then in knickerbockers." "How old are you?" chipped in another. "I'll be thirty next birthday," said Davis, and all the boys laughed.

* * *

O. P. Pratt, who had been taking it in the conversation with a good deal of satisfaction, then thought it his turn to say something. "Davis may be a little off," said he, "but I remember when Hawley's scrap with a rattlesnake. I was a little fellow then and when I was but three years old. It happened down here on Main street, and I remember well what a good whipping I got when I went home. Why, I can almost feel the whipping of that scrap to-day and sometimes I'm actually afraid to sit down as has 60 grown with me."

* * *

Then came Sid Kimball's turn. "Why, here you all talk about early and remotest days, and I don't remember a word of you that can remember as far back as I can. Do you know I remember when Hawley was a little boy?" "Yes I do," said one of the boys sarcastically. "Sid's right," cried Gillespie, as he tried to make his escape. "It's a fact," cried Sid as he caught the boy. "If you want me to prove it, I can prove it. If you want me to—" "Come on with your proof," yelled all, and the story teller quickly answered, "I was there when it occurred."

A venerable benign and kindly looking old lady dropped into the office yesterday just as the "News" forms were being made up and a few minutes conversation between the foreman and "the powers that be," regarding the matter, was in progress. A look of consternation came over her face when she the following colloquy drifted through the crack of the half open door.

"Well, the best thing you can do is to cut off Queen Lil's head; take a piece of the neck and sew it on Thomas Hanks in the bad box, double lead Colonel Hanks and for goodness sake don't let Sam Davis and Tom Hayes Agency catch and kill Perrapin Pomeroy off the scene, and separate Bill Hoyt and Jim Hoyt for fear of a combination of the two Hoyts, and scatter with a three inch dash." A few minutes later the young editor met the dear old lady who had supposed from the hasty interjectorily muttering whatever are we coming to?"

While on the subject of journalism, a young engineer with an expensive E. and W. watch, together with a Clan Gordon scotch terrier, left the reporterial department and with shifting eyes and furtive tongue inquired for the young man who had been assigned to what was in its cold, cold world turning a honest scoop the month with the department. Upon being informed he was sent in big tender morsels of the story editor, who immediately was off opposite and asked a few pointed questions. Hours passed and the young man with the wooden hundred word affidavit, that she would be holding Hanks Green by the left ear, and Hanks would be holding the right hand. As the story editor's lady friend was pressed out of the cemetery he saw the young man in the distance. Two Hearts That Beat as One" was assigned and the approved young man's wonderful story.

"Your son as old as ever doubling in his medical court of inquiry—never prepared to take a photograph of a man without his hat on, and reporterial hats, the blushing and accomplished. Hearing of our account and sensitive lady Mrs. Wilson, the young Fay, was led to the historical spot by the certain prospective bridegroom James Jennings, of the well-known firm of —.

"That afternoon he of the multihued and multiple hat, was seen in the Theater foyer. After wearing a stylish hat for a couple of hours, he finally the conclusion to open a copy of the paper and from the pocket with swelling and sore and palpitating heart, he gazed upon the story of the critical page. Finally his eye caught his checked from upon page page, sunbleached in the sun two patent medicine ads he took the Theater.
