EDITORIAL NOTES.

—One of the latest sensations in Brooklyn was the striking of Mr. Thomas F. Clarke, of the Wallack Dramatic Society, by Mr. Douglas Walker, of the Amaranth Society, with a whip, on the stage of the Academy of Music, immediately after the play, Feb. 14. The cause is supposed to have been jealousy over attentions to Mrs. Fanny Foster.

—The bar association of New York is taking in hand the professional morals of its members. It is stated that the condition of the bar of that city is fast becoming a source of public discussion, and that a terrible amount of piracy and extortion is practised in some of the courts by members of the bar, to which wrong the association appears to be determined to put an end if possible.

—The Washington Star of Feb. 14 says, "The President will in a short time give a farewell dinner to his cabinet. Secretary Fish is the only member of the cabinet who has served uninterruptedly during the whole eight years of President Grant's administration, who during his two terms of office has had four Secretaries of the Treasury, three Postmasters General, five Attorneys General, four Secretaries of War, two Secretaries of the Navy, and three Secretaries of the Interior."

—In the House of Representatives, Feb. 1, Mr. Cannon, of Utah, presented the petition of Silas Hillman, and 35 other citizens of Cannon, Utah, for cheap telegraphy, to the committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

—Archdeacon Gray, an English Episcopal dignitary travelling in this country, is charmed with the people. He recently lost himself in Chicago and he thus speaks about it—"Last night, for instance, we lost our way and couldn't find the hotel, and seeing a tattered, poverty-stricken man, asked him the way. He took the greatest pains to show us, and directed us plainly, and did not hang around in hope of a reward, as in other countries. In fact, he refused to take a shilling for his trouble. And then the gallantry shown the ladies — that strikes a visitor strangely. Ladies are everywhere treated so courteously by all classes." If the archdeacon persists in throwing himself around so loosely in Chicago, one of these times he will be kindly directed somewhere and his kind director and confederates will kindly relieve him of any spare cash he may have in his pockets, and that too without his offering it to them, or his consent to their appropriation of it being asked, and then he will be still more astonished at "American politeness."

—The London Spectator says there is sometimes a deficiency of justice in America, but never of generosity.

—The New York Herald says, "From the newsnow-a-days it would seem that marriages begin with a court and end with a court."

—E. E. Hale says, "A holy life is a healthful life." No doubt, but it seems that few people desire to be healthful on those terms.

DISGUSTED PEOPLE AND HASTY UTTERANCES.

Most people politically inclined get more or less excited over the current presidential electoral business. But too much excitement is not a paying investment. The New York Sun recently had a triple leaded leader, vehemently urging that the electoral commission was utterly unconstitutional and that its decisions should be held void.

Rev. Petroleum V. Nasby, "ex-reformer," is disgusted over the situation and thus gives vent to his feelings—

"I wuz wunst in favor uv the Joint Commishun, and was eager to hev it. When it wuz ez good ez shoor that a majority uv the Judges wood be Democratic, givin us a majority on one in the lot, I bleevd it to be constitutional. When it lookt ez tho we cood get Tilden and Reform in that way and make me shoor uv my post-offis, I preferd it to blood. With Bradley on the commishun the Corners is clearly av the opinyn that it is unconstitushnel. Such a thing wuz never contemplated by the fathers, it wuz never done afore, and ther aint no precedent for it."

Some very hard things have been said of the commission, both in and out of Congress. Of course all the disappointed are disgusted, and many of them have sensationally emphatic methods of expressing their disgust. One man appears to have put his foot into it rather deeply in this way, and that is Don Piatt, editor of the Washington Capital. Always outspoken, that paper has long been at political enmity with President Grant and the party in power, and has said some bitter and personal things of them. Its recent utterances concerning the electoral commission have been so hot and hasty that the administration has taken huge offence, and our dispatches state that the President has determined to sue Mr. Piatt for libel on himself. It is also further stated that the offending gentleman was to be arrested to day (Feb. 20) on a charge of seditious writing, an act which is held to be punishable by both common and statute law.

Discretion before the offence is always the better part of valor. After the offence there is much less room for discretion, and it is generally of less beneficial effect. Judge Jere. Black manifested a little of this quality of early discretion when he remarked, though somewhat excitedly, as he is reported to have done, "When you've got your hand in a lion's mouth, it's exceedingly bad policy to be making faces at the fellow at the other end, twisting that lion's tail." Or at the lion either, for the matter of that. But discretion in time is not the commonest characteristic, even of politicians, who are supposed to study the diplomatic art in greater or less degree.

TO-DAY'S DISPATCHES.

CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, 20.—The session of the Senate was resumed at 10 o'clock, but no business was done.

At 1:30 notice was received from the House that they were ready to meet the Senate in joint convention, and the Senate repaired to the House of Representatives.

HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, 20.—The House met at 11 o'clock; half an hour was consumed in calling the roll.

The regular business of the day was introduced by Gibson offering an order that the Hayes electoral votes for Louisiana be not counted.

Hurlbut moved to amend by striking out the word "not."

The discussion was opened by New, who said that he had voted for the electoral commission bill without hesitation, and he was not ashamed of the suppert which he had given to that measure. He accepted, without qualification, his humble share of the responsibility. He would vote to sustain the objection to the decision of the commission. He was in favor of proceeding, without unnecessary delay, to the completion of the count.

Seelye said that in the case of the Louisiana election, the corruption on the one side seemed as heinous as cruelty on the other side was horrible. He found it quite impossible to say which of the two sets of electors from Louisiana had the true will of the people of that State. It would have been hard to find wiser and more candid men than those who had pronounced the decision of the electoral commission. He appreciated the strength of their position. Congress could not be too jealous of the constitutional right of a State to choose its presidential electors.

Joyce declared that the whole scheme of the election to the Presidency of the grand-fraud of Grammercy Park had been a superb cheat from beginning to end.

McMahon said the decision of the commission in the case of Louisiana was one worse in its consequences to the American people than the decision in the Florida case. As to Oregon, no democrat looked forward with much hope to the decision in that case.

Rice protested against the wrong and violence embodied in the decision, and argued that the whole subject should have been referred back to the commission.

Watterson rose to speak, and immediately the floor and galleries were hushed into stillness. He said if the acceptance of the inevitable with resolution and dignity be the highest, as it is the rarest, form of courage known among men, it is made harder in this present instance by the consciousness of double dealing and foul play. Two courses are open to the majority on this floor. On the one hand, a passionate outcry at once impotent and childish; on the other hand, without offering needless obstruction to the progress of events, an earnest, manly, but temperate protest against what we believe the great and grievous wrong. In my judgment the latter is our clear and bounden duty. We owe it to the necessities of the case. We owe it to the country. We owe it to ourselves. Because we are duped by false pretenses into the snare furnished, that is no reason why we should forget the obligations that press upon honorable men. In the very act of passing the electoral commission bill we provided for the contingency that has come upon us. I voted for that measure in perfect good faith. The result is against us, and detestable as I must think the means that brought it about, I accept it as final, and shall go to my post and shall tell them all, for as new advised they knew only a part, and when they have taken time for reflection they will, I am very sure, illustrate the wisdom and grace of moderation, doing nothing that does not become good citizens. Life will still go forward in spite of all this. There are many things to live for yet in this rough world, and among the rest that day of reckoning dies irae, dies illa, when the dark shall be light and the wrong be made right.

Danford defended the decision as one which, outside of party feeling, would meet the approval of the whole American people. Although there had been investigating committees into elections in Florida, Louisiana and Oregon which had found much crookedness, yet in all the words spoken, the letters written and the telegrams sent, there had not been traced to the president elect or to any member of his household one word that would bring the blush of shame to the American people. (Applause.)

The Speaker here announced that to-day's legislative session had begun, and after prayer and the reading of the journal, the debate was resumed.

The debate closed at one o'clock and the House then voted on Gibson's resolution that the decision of the commission be not agreed to, and it was adopted—yeas 182, nays 99; a party vote except Seeley and Pierce, of Mass., who voted with the democrats.

A message was then sent to the Senate that the House was ready to meet that body in joint convention.

When Michigan was reached in the count of the electoral vote, Tucker objected to counting the vote of Daniel L. Crossman, the republican elector, claiming that Crossman had not been duly appointed.

A motion for recess was voted down by a large majority, and the House proceeded to discuss the objection made by Tucker against the vote of Crossman, one of the presidential electors for Michigan.

EASTERN.

Particulars of the East St. Louis Fire—The Bridge so Damaged that Trains Cannot Cross.

ST. LOUIS, MO., 20.—A fire broke out about midnight in a row of frame houses just north of the bridge approaching east St. Louis, and at this writing about a dozen houses are nearly consumed. A strong north wind carried the flames to the woodwork of the bridge approaches, and about 1,000 feet of it is now burning. Several engines from St. Louis started across the bridge to assist in subduing the fire but were cut off by the flames, and forced to return. Subsequently, two or three of them were taken over on the ferry boat, and are now doing good service; but little definite information can be obtained to-night, but it is safe to say that the eastern approach to the bridge is so badly damaged that trains cannot cross, and the houses where the fire originated will be entirely destroyed. No estimate of the loss can yet be given.

Another Failure.

CHICAGO, 20.—The failure is announced of D. Kreigh, commission merchant in produce and provisions, and an extensive dealer on 'Change. His liabilities are not known accurately, but are said to be heavy. The rapid decline in provisions is the probable cause.

Death of the Oldest Catholic Priest in America.

NEW YORK, 20.—Father Kernan, the oldest Catholic priest in America, died at Lancaster, Pa., yesterday, aged 98.

Dissatisfaction at the Disposition of Vanderbilt's Property.

The Times, this morning, reports that Cornelius J. Vanderbilt, upon the advice of an intimate friend, has taken steps legally to oppose the old gentleman's will. The intimate friend is said to be a considerable creditor of Cornelius. Some of the other friends to the deceased are not satisfied with the disposition of the property.

Another Rear Admiral Gone.

Rear Admiral Louis M. Goldsborough, died this morning of typhoid pneumonia. This is the sixth death among rear admirals within four or five weeks.

The funeral services over the remains of the late Rear Admiral Davis took place to-day in St. Johns Church. The interment will be in Cambridge, Mass.

What Hayes as President Intends to do.

The Columbus correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer says Hayes, as president, intends to pursue a lenient conservative policy, and will seek to allay political hatred. He proposes to conciliate the South as far as he can, and will make the single question of universal suffrage the point to gather about him men of all political opinions in the south. As illustrating this point, he feels disposed to recognize the Nicholls government in Louisiana, and the Wade Hampton government in South Carolina as being the de facto government of these States. In selecting his cabinet his efforts will be to gather around him men of conservative qualities rather than those of intense radicalism.

The Real Estate Pool Committee—Conkling Not There.

The Sun's Washington special says startling developments will be made by the real estate pool committee in regard to the Treasury irregularities, which go to show that an immense amount, delivered for cancellation, was never destroyed at all. The correspondent attempts to prove at length that this money was used for Hayes' election.

The same authority says it is reported that when the House had agreed on a recess, Conkling was about to make a violent speech against the action of the tribunal. The rumor spread rapidly and filled the Senate, but the expectant crowd saw no Conkling in his seat when the debate began. He did say on Sunday that he could not allow Louisiana to pass without a protest, as he believed there had been too much fraud in the State for the party to carry it. They say that Conkling has lost the great opportunity of his life. His weakness at the critical moment will, it is alleged, ruin his influence with the new administration, while his surrender will cost him the respect of the liberal in both parties.

PERA, 20.—Twenty more Bulgarians, charged with complicity in the May insurrection, have been sentenced each to twenty years penal servitude.

Chevkel Pasha, of atrocities notoriety, has been appointed to the command of the army corps on the Danube.

GERMANY.

Wagner's Second Performance Postponed.

BERLIN, 20.—The second performance of Wagner's "Ring of the Niebelungen" at Beyruth, has been postponed, owing to the impaired health of the composer.

Bodies Found in a Well.
