

THE NEWS' SUPPLEMENT.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 28, 1865.

MALACHI'S COVE.

And now she went to work, hooking up the disheveled hairs of the ocean, and landing many a cargo on the extreme margin of the sand, from whence she would be able in the evening to drag it back before the invading waters would return to reclaim the spoil. And on his side also Barty made his heap up against the northern buttresses of which I have spoken. Barty's heap became big and still bigger, so that he knew, let the pony work as he might, he could not take it all up that evening. But still it was not as large as Mally's heap. Mally's hook was better than his fork, and Mally's skill was better than his strength. And when he forked in some haul Mally would jeer him with a wild, weird laughter, and shriek to him through the wind that he was not half a man. At first he answered her with laughing words, but before long, as she boasted of her success and pointed to the failure, he became angry, and then he answered her no more. The gloom among the rocks was now becoming thicker and thicker. But still he worked on. He would not be beaten by a girl.

The great hole was now full of water, but of water which seemed to be boiling as though in a pot. And the pot was full of floating masses—large treasures of seaweed which were thrown to and fro upon its surface, but lying there so thick that one would seem almost able to rest upon it without sinking. Mally knew well how useless it was to attempt to rescue aught from the fury of that boiling cauldron. The hole went in under the rocks, and the side of it towards the shore lay high, slippery and steep. The hole, even at low water, was never empty, and Mally believed that there was no bottom to it. Pouladioul she was accustomed to call it; which was supposed, when translated, to mean that this was the hole of the Evil One. Never did Mally attempt to make her own of weed which had found its way into that pot.

But Barty Gunliffe knew no better, and she watched him as he endeavored to steady himself on the treacherously slippery edge of the pool. He fixed himself there and made a haul, with some small success. How he managed it she hardly knew, but she stood still for a while watching him anxiously, and then she saw him slip. He slipped and recovered himself—slipped again, and again recovered himself. "Barty, you fool," she screamed, "if you get yourself pitched in there, you'll never come out no more." Whether she simply wished to frighten him, or whether her heart relented and she had thought of his danger with dismay, who shall say? She could not have told herself. She hated him as much as ever—but she could hardly have wished to see him drowned before her eyes. "You go on, and don't mind me," said he, speaking in a hoarse, angry tone. "Mind you!—who minds you?" retorted the girl. And then she again prepared herself for her work.

But as she went down over the rocks with her long hook balanced in her hands, she suddenly heard a splash, and turning quickly round saw the body of her enemy tumbling amidst the eddying waves in the pool.

Instantly Mally hurried across to the edge of the pool, crouching down upon her hands and knees for security as she did so. As the wave receded, Barty's head and face was carried round near to her, and she could see that his forehead was covered with blood. Whether he were alive or dead she did not know. She had seen nothing but his blood, and the light colored hair of his head lying amidst the foam. Then his body was drawn along by the suction of the retreating wave, but the mass of water that escaped was not on this occasion large enough to carry the man out with it. Instantly Mally was at work with her hook, and getting it fixed into his coat, dragged him towards the spot on which she was kneeling. During the half minute of repose she got him so close that she could touch his shoulder. Straining herself down, laying herself over the long bending handle of the hook, she strove to grasp him with her right hand. But she could not do it; she could only touch him. Then came the next breaker, forcing itself on with a roar, looking to Mally as though it must certainly knock her from her resting-place, and destroy them both. It rushed over her as she lay almost prostrate, and when the water was gone from her eyes, and the tumult of the foam, and the violence of the roaring breaker had passed by her, she found herself at her length upon the rock, while his body had been lifted up, free from her hook, and was

WANTED.

I WANT to engage the services of four good,
reliable men to do general farm work, at liberal wages. Men with families are preferred as I am not prepared to board them. Employment for the entire season will be given, and job work for all suitable working weather
through the Winter.

I also want to contract for the buddings of fifteen thousand peach stalks, with the choicest varieties of plum and apricot; and from ten to twenty thousand apple stalks, with the best kinds of Summer, Fall and Winter fruit. The buds to be warranted to grow and to be true to their names.
