EGG INSPECTORS.

An Expert Can Handle Twelve Thousand a Day.

The men who inspect eggs in the large cities are marvelously dexterous. They toss them from one hand to another, lift them out of cases by the handful, finger the fragile things with a sleight of hand dexterity which is astonishing and can make an egg balance itself on the edge of a case without even nicking the shell.

In the early days of the trade these jugglers of eggs were called "egg candlers," because the lowly tallow dip supplied the X rays which betrayed the interior economy of the product of hens' nests. But the development of the industry and the adoption of the electric incandescent lamp for the light brought about a change of name, and the members of the craft, of whom there are about 300 in Chicago, are known as "egg inspectors."

INSPECTING EGGS BY CANDLELIGHT.

A good brisk inspector, handling a fair run of eggs, can "candle" 30 cases of eggs a day. As each case holds 30 dozens the day's run will average 10,800 eggs. The work is carried on in a dark room, in which the only lights are those used for inspecting the eggs. The condition of an egg is found by holding it to the light, and the degree of translucency, color, spots and shape of the dark places determine the grade and character of the egg.

In Chicago and all large centers which have the electric light the incandescent lamp is used. But the candle by no means is laid on the shelf. Many inspectors claim that the incandescent light hurts their eyes, and that candlelight is best after all, even though its modest flame flickers and sputters when the nimble fingers of the candler stir the air about it.

The candle usually is held upright between three shingle nails stuck in the end of a short board, and the inspector holds the eggs close to and slightly above the flame, so that he looks down upon it.

Any man can candle eggs if he "knows eggs," for the handicraft consists simply in holding the egg to the light, looking through it and classifying it according to its appearance. But—and the "but" is a large one—the man who inspects eggs must be able to distinguish at one glance the particular class to which the egg belongs, and egg inspectors recognize 20 grades.

A clever man with a keen eye, a nice sense of discrimination, an adhesive memory and a well developed knack of handling things may become a fair egg inspector in three years, but five years probably will pass before he is expert enough to go on the list of adepts.

The handling of the eggs is an important factor in the craft. Any man can pick up a single egg, hold it to the light, turn it around two or three times and lay the egg back in the crate again, but it takes an expert to pick up four eggs in one hand, three in another and by the mere working of the fingers roll an egg between the thumb and two fingers and then roll it out of the way to put another one in its place.

Generally two eggs are picked up with each hand at a time, so that they are inspected in groups of four, and the rapidity with which the work is carried on is so great that from 10,000 to 12,000 eggs a day are inspected.

But the inspector does more than candle his wares, for he handles his own cases, lifts them to the bench, takes them down again, nails on covers, transfers eggs from one case to another and tells of marvelous curiosities in the egg line which have passed under his fingers. He mentions three yolk eggs; double eggs in which a perfectly formed egg, shell and all, is found inside of an egg; eggs with all of the colors of the rainbow in their shells; eggs with words and dates formed in the shell, and eggs with double and triple shells.

A strictly "fresh" egg is one without flaws of any kind. It may be ten days or two weeks old, but it is not more aged. This is called a "selected" egg and commands the highest price.

When eggs begin to grow stale, the waste shrinks, and this is shown to the inspector by a well defined line in the large end of the egg. If shrunk too much for the first class, the egg goes into the "seconds," which also include fresh eggs that are "checked" or cracked.

A checked egg is a cracked egg, but the crack is not noticed until it is held up to the light or is rattled or "ticked" in the hand with another egg. A solid eggshell gives a clear sound if ticked against another egg, but a cracked or checked egg gives out a dead, wooden sound.

After the seconds come "spots" and "leaks." "Spots" are eggs in which the yolk clings to the shell, and "leaks" are broken eggs. These are the general grades, but each of them is subdivided into grades recognized by the trade.

The best eggs are selected to be placed in cold storage warehouses, from which they will be taken and sold when fresh eggs are scarce. They are carefully inspected before they are sent to the icehouse or cooler, and most of the inspectors are on this work in April and May and sometimes the early part of June.

During this period the hen is working overtime and sending fresh eggs to market. Then she takes it easy for a time.

Eggs are kept in cold storage for seven, eight or more months. For the first three months they retain their original flavor and then they begin to deteriorate, and the longer they are kept the stalr they become.

When withdrawn, they are inspected as though they were fresh eggs and divided into similar grades. Pickled eggs are those kept in some lime or alkali solution, and salted eggs are preserved by being packed in salt.

Of course, none of these preserved eggs is as good as the fresh article, but if they pass the candler they are good enough to eat.

The inspector can detect preserved eggs at once and also can name the "icehouse," "pickled" or "salted" egg when it comes up. The icehouse egg is shrunk, its yolk is dark and it has a dull ring when ticked. The shell of a pickled egg is mottled and gives a metallic sound and the yolk is dark, and a salt egg has a shell which looks as though the salt had eaten into it.

A pickled egg is apt to burst when boiled, for the lime fills up the pores so that the steam is confined.

A "blood egg" is bright red when held to the light. In "yellow rot" the white and yolk solidify together and the egg shows yellowish red. A "watery egg" has an air bubble which floats on top, no matter how the egg is held.

A "green" egg is pale before the light and shows a dark yolk. When broken, the yolk is seen to be a dirty green in color. A frozen egg shows a crack reaching from one end to the other, and a double yolk egg has two shadowy balls which swim round inside when the egg is turned, and a rotten egg is almost black before the light.

Photography and Ducks.

One of the most remarkable accusations brought against the new photography is that of an American Field writer, who says: "I think photography has done a great deal to decrease the supply of ducks, which," he very properly adds, "will be news, no doubt," to many of his readers. Sportsmen have been saying that nothing but general adoption of cameras instead of firearms will save the game, and now to run up against such a statement as that is, to say the least, astonishing.

It appears that for the purpose of perfecting the picture animals must be used, and this can be procured only from eggs. Chicken eggs are too valuable as food, therefore the Hebrides islands of Scotland, Lofoden of Norway, Labrador, Greenland, South America, and in fact every conceivable breeding ground of wild birds is robbed of eggs by sailors or men from excursion sailing expeditions. This is especially hard on the ducks of various kinds, particularly in Labrador, where they breed in thousands of nests to the square mile, while the scavenger birds of the sea, the various gulls and terns, suffer from these depredations. The birds cannot stand this drain long, and the question arises, What will happen when all the eggs are gone?

Asphalt.

Another kind of asphalt taken has been introduced in Austria under government direction, a principal recommendation being the quickness of hardening which characterizes it. It is described as an earthy brown powder having a slight odor of tar, and consists mainly of sulphur and iron slag, analysis showing 32.32 per cent of sulphur, 5.21 of tar, 27.83 of iron slag and 0.43 water, the iron slag containing 43.91 per cent of silica, 22.45 of ferrous oxide, 20.9 of alumina and 4.18 of lime. The hardness is attributed chiefly to the formation of an iron sulphide, the tar acting as a reducing agent. The silica, clay and lime, though possibly combining at a slower rate, are regarded simply as impurities.

His Tone.

"I'd like to hear you play the violin, Mr. Tillinghast," said 7-year-old Tommy Dillingham, who was entertaining the caller.

"But I don't play the violin, Tommy."

"Then papa must be mistaken. I heard him tell mamma that you played second fiddle at home."—Exchange.

A Railroad Official's Experience.

MR. EDWARD EDMONDS, long connected with railroad construction in Nebraska, writes: "My heart troubled and pained me for 28 years. Shortness of breath was the constant and most common symptom. Intense, excruciating pain, generally followed any severe exertion. Faintness, hunger without any appetite; fluttering that made me clutch my breast, and palpitation that often staggered me as if I would fall, were frequent attacks. Again, everything would turn black if I arose from a stooping posture quickly. Sleepless nights with their penetrating unrest were numerous and I could not rest day or night. I consulted leading physicians and tried advertised remedies. They gave me no relief. One of

SUMMONS.

In the District Court of the Third Judicial District of the State of Utah, County of Salt Lake.

John Harris, plaintiff vs.
E. W. Jones, defendant.

The State of Utah sends greeting to E. W. Jones, defendant.

YOU ARE HEREBY REQUIRED TO APPEAR in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the District Court of the Third Judicial District of the State of Utah, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to have judgment against defendant in sum of [illegible], with interest [illegible] per cent per annum from [illegible], for [illegible], and costs, and [illegible] for [illegible] and to foreclose a certain mortgage [illegible] by defendant to plaintiff [illegible] [illegible]; and to have the usual decree of this court for foreclosure of said mortgage and sale of said premises, adjudging the proceeds of such sale be applied in payment of amounts due, and that defendant be forever barred and foreclosed of all right and interest in said premises; that purchaser be entitled to the [illegible] of possession of said premises and for other relief.
