THE CONFERENCE.

The Sixty-fourth Semi-Annual Conference which closed yesterday, Sunday, October 8th, has indeed been an occasion of great joy to the Saints, as was anticipated by the NEWS that it would be. The visitors were favored with delightful weather and the attendance, particularly during the last day, was much larger than many had dared to hope beforehand, considering the hard times. This may well be taken as an indication that the Gospel is dearer than all to the majority of the Saints and that the material interests are to them, as they should be, only a second consideration. As long as this is the case the Lord will surely bless His people.

A great many subjects were touched upon by the speakers, comprising those of a practical nature as well as of a spiritual nature. The instructions given by the leading brethren as to temporal affairs were exceedingly timely, and those who will carry them out will find by experience that they were prompted by the Spirit of the Lord. It has often been remarked, the Gospel includes everything that pertains to the welfare of man, and a true servant of God has his mind open to all the many promptings like unto this, be it for time or eternity. Those who are truly imbued with the principles of the Gospel show this by giving heed to and acting upon such instructions. In fact, by practicing the principle of revelation pertaining to temporal affairs such as relate to our conduct towards our family, neighbors, friends and men in general, the mind is prepared to grasp truths of a higher order. Only those, in other words, who do their duties conscientiously, comprehend clearly the doctrines of salvation for the living and the dead, and all other principles of the kingdom of God.

The fact that a great change of sentiment towards the Saints is noticeable throughout the nation at large was dwelt upon by several speakers. It is pleasant to reflect upon this circumstance. The Saints bear animosity towards none and cannot but rejoice when the difficulties usually towards them shall be conquered by their magnanimity. But it is more than pleasant to reflect on. It is a testimony to the truth of the predictions by the servants of the Lord, according to which the hearts of men shall be softened from time to time towards this people. And it serves to strengthen our faith in the power of the Lord to rule even the hearts of men and thus to carry out His purposes.

The subject of missions at home and abroad which was so ably discussed, among other important subjects, in the opening discourse is one that deserves the greatest attention of the Saints. The suggestions given were exceedingly timely and worthy to be carried out in every particular. If this is done they will prove an impetus to missionary work the effects of which will be visible wherever the Church has planted the standard of the Gospel.

Not the least feature of the gatherings was the soul-inspiring singing and music tendered by our celebrated choir.

Taken all in all, the Conference just closed was one long to be remembered as one of the profitable and instructive meetings of the saints of the Most High.

"THE IRRIGATION IDEA."

The October number of the Review of Reviews contains a lengthy, well-considered and valuable article upon "the irrigation idea and its coming congress" at Los Angeles, from the able pen of Wm. E. Smythe, Esq., editor of the Irrigation Age. Among the many photographs, maps, views, etc., with which the paper is embellished, the leading place is given to a portrait of ex-Gov. A. L. Thomas of this Territory, chairman of the national executive committee of the Irrigation Congress; while a prominent mention in the letter press is accorded "The Charming Homes of Utah." The whole article is well worth reproduction if space would permit, and it deserves perusal from all those at least who are interested in the great and growing subject of irrigation. The NEWS gladly makes room for Mr. Smythe's reference to the successes attending its introduction and practice in this Territory:

> To enter now to a locality representing entirely different conditions, and irrigating a large portion of the arid region, we turn to Utah. This is in the geographical center of the irrigation congress. In climate and altitude it represents the medium between the two extremes—sloping on the north and south. Whatever else may be said of the Mormons, it is conceded that they are by nature and by habit the best of empire builders. When they entered the valley of Great Salt Lake, forty-four years ago, they found an alkali desert needing them. They had heard nothing of irrigation, but their leader was a man possessing a genius for surmounting difficulties. He had no time to waste in waiting for the rainy seasons to the arid soil of the desert. His followers were not only able to sustain themselves, but rapidly went forward in the accumulation of wealth. The average size of their farms is twenty acres. In certainty and variety of production these farms are nowhere surpassed, and in beauty of surroundings those homes are the equal of any to be found on the face of the earth. Utah is full of beautiful villages filled to their utmost capacity with prosperous twenty-acre farms, and nothing is a high degree the charms of country with the conveniences of town life, to some portions of Utah the agricultural village of Europe has been preserved. In those instances the farmers have their homes in the villages and go out to their farms each day. The success of the Mormon settlers was due in part to the fact that their operations were planned by one masterful mind. The common people then labored with an intelligence superior to their own.

A REMINISCENCE AND A SEQUEL.

The NEWS recently mentioned a pleasant call from Hon. A. F. Macdonald, all the way from the northwestern corner of that thirteen-star conservative nation, old Maine. He is also an incident which brings us a fine lesson on those immortal defects and traits concerning which we always receive of interest—the career of Maximilian and the transcription of events which descended upon him at last.

Captain Jones was called after the man who was president at the time when he left and for some time after. He was for a while a fugitive upon the borders of the United States and the history of the invader were everywhere the subject. At the Junction the president was supplied with a large quantity of imported wine and champagne, cash by sympathizers in the country, which can be traced back and overthrown the enemy at every point. The champagne concerned he last stand at Queretaro where he was betrayed by one of his immediate chosen lieges, who after a hasty court martial was shot. This ended the attempted overthrow of the republic. Jones was severely criticized by the more enthusiastic and zealous everywhere for what was termed his bloodthirsty savagery in executing the Austrian, but it should be remembered that the latter himself set the pace, fought under the black flag, would give no quarter and take none. Our government was invited to intervene but could not consistently do so. Juarez acquired the title of the Washington of Mexico, and a city as well as a colony bears his name; but it is noteworthy that the Mormon colonizers were the first to thus remember the sturdy old patriot.

A distant relative of Maximilian and heir presumptive to the Austrian throne recently visited this city incognito, his semi-disguise being maintained for the most part throughout the United States. At every point where offered he declined a reception array kind of public hospitality, preferring to be unobserved so far as possible. This is attributed by some to the event previously spoken of, the royal blood of the Hapsburgs presumably tingling whenever the United States of America are mentioned. For the young man's sake we hope this is not true; he and his people need not stay out of doors on cold nights to show that they dislike us, for obvious reasons.

THEY FASTEN IT ON HIM.

A short time since the NEWS published from the Tribune of this city an account of how the Rev. Mr. Brandt, of Ogden, had deserted to a Kansas audience the alleged woe-stricken condition of Mormon women, and had exhibited a scrofulous view of a boy who he said was the fourth wife of a Mormon Bishop, but who was recognized by two Ogden ladies in the audience as a picture of Mr. Brandt's own wife. The revenue lecturer published a contradiction of this, saying he got the picture from Mrs. Stenhouse's book. But the Ogden ladies will not be put down that way, and come back in Sunday's issue of the paper quoted from in a statement that seems to conclusively fasten Mr. Brandt in a very tight corner. The item reads:

> In reply to the Tribune's article representing that Mr. Brandt, in a lecture in Kansas, showed a scrofulous view of his wife's face as being that of the fourth wife of a Mormon Bishop, Mr. Brandt said that the two women who circulated that report are Mormon women. This is not true, for the women who vouch for the truth of the Tribune's article are members in good standing of the First M. E. church of Ogden, women highly respected in the community. During Mr. Brandt's lecture tour for the benefit of his church, his expenses exceeded the amount of money he collected, and the church has had to make up the deficit. He did, however, turn over to the church about $[illegible] of pledges to pay, upon which it is estimated the church may realize $200. The above statement is from one of the official members of the Christian church of Ogden.

DON'T BE GLOOMY.

Those who prefer to keep on the ragged edge of trouble and foreboding do not as a rule care to have others undertake the task of locating them more comfortably. We have them here and there in every community, and their influence is the most permeative and active of any that a similar number of people can produce by any persuasion they may exercise, of device they may bring to bear. A dark, cloudy day suits their temperament best, and to tell them that the sun still shines beyond the clouds does not provoke the response that we are not yet on that side of them. They prefer to be miserable and it is useless to try to make them anything else.

There may be no royal road to happiness on earth, but a religious cotemporary truthfully observes that there are many useful guide-boards. Here are some: Forget your neighbor's faults. Forget the slander you have ever heard. Forget the temptations. Forget the fault-finding, and give little thought to the cause that provoked it. Forget the peculiarities of your friends and only remember the good points that make you love of them. Forget all personal quarrels or injuries that you may have heard by accident, and which, if repeated, would seem a thousand times worse than they are. Blot out, as far as possible, the disagreeables of life; they will come, and they will grow in size as you remember them, and continual thought of the acts of meanness, or, worse still, malice, will only tend to make you more sensitive to them. Obliterate everything disagreeable from yesterday; start out with a clean sheet for today, and write upon it, for sweet memory's sake, only those things that are lovely and lovable.

We may add that when seeming oppressed by these "hard times," look back a short distance and you will be able to be cheerful mentally by times very much worse, and yet you survived. Surely it is not much harder to look the other way. We don't have to lay hold of the wheels of time and make them revolve; they will revolve with or without our part and the morrow will come no earlier and no later whether we lie awake hoping for or dreading it, or whether we survey the interesting hands "third short" sweet teacher, taking chase" let us make the most of every case, and put a smile on the wear and tear of the system which constant repining and worry induces. There is much comfort in the quotation—

> The lovely sun at his own world
> Is some weeks time to come is
> Yet whatever good or evil we look
> Towards him we see it.
