BIG COURSING EVENT ON TODAY

Best Dogs in the United States To Compete for Waterloo Cup.

MR. BLUE TO DEFEND TITLE.

Butte Dog, Winner of Prize, Is Again Entered for Contest—Two Rounds This Afternoon.

The most important coursing event in the big tournament now going on at the state fair grounds, is the Waterloo cup contest which starts this afternoon. The first and second rounds are scheduled for today and the fastest dogs in the United States are entered for the races.

Last year the Waterloo cup was captured by Mr. Blue, a fleet footed hound from Butte, owned by W. R. Tonkin. This famous dog is again entered and will undoubtedly have a hard time in defending the title and winning the cup this year. The hound is strong, fast and is well trained, understanding all the fine points of the game, but he will have to compete with Horace N., winner of the inaugural stakes; Tribly, Brazen, winner of the Mississippi Valley futurity, Walla Walla, winner of the Cullen Stake, Gertrude, winner of the Log Cabin stake; Rocked Asleep, a famous dog from the coast and many others.

The finals will be run tomorrow afternoon. The purse for this big event is $1,500. The drawings for the event were made last evening with the following results:

HYLAND RETURNS.

"Fighting Dick" Back from California—Sullivan is Still Anxious.

"Fighting Dick" Hyland, the little California lightweight fighter, has returned from San Francisco where he has been visiting with his parents. His manager, "Red Sammy" McClinnie, has had several offers for a match but as yet has not accepted any of them. He has an offer to meet Neary but a local promoter is anxious to match Dick with Summers, the English boxer. Local fight fans insist that McClinnie should match the boy with Pete Sullivan and they can not understand why Sammy does not make the match. Sullivan could give Hyland the fight of his life and he is willing and anxious for a meeting.

POWERS RE-ELECTED

President and Secretary of Eastern League—Improvement Meeting.

New York, Oct. 28.—Many baseball men from all parts of the United States were in this city today to attend the meeting of the national board of the National Association of Minor League Clubs and Executive Boards.

Patrick T. Powers was re-elected president and secretary and treasurer of the Eastern league, and as there was no question raised as to the action taken in a case of protest by the board of directors, everything passed off harmoniously.

The national board of the National association occupied itself with settling disputes between the leagues, the difficulties for the most part being over the disposition of players. They will make a report to the main body at its meeting tomorrow.

AFTER LAHM CUP.

Man Who Won International Race Making Preparations.

New York, Oct. 28—Oscar Erslosh who won the international cup in the recent balloon race, will probably make another ascension in this country before returning to Germany. In the race for the international cup, Alan R. Hawley landed near Baltimore and covered 712 miles. He notified the Aero club committee before he started that he was going to try to win the Lahm cup, which had a few days before been won by Captain Chandler. Lieutenant Lahm made a flight of 462 miles and Captain Chandler secured the cup by going 604 miles, but he lost to Mr. Hawley last week.

Erslosh wants to secure this trophy before going home and it is said that he will make an effort, starting from Kansas City. He hopes, too, to make a new record for distance.

HOW CORBETT WON THE CHAMPIONSHIP

James J. Jumped Into Fame by Beating Once Mighty John L.

Whatever other reputation James J. Corbett may achieve, he will long be remembered as the man who beat the great John L. Sullivan, writes Bob Edgren.

Hundreds have said that Sullivan was fine for the picking and that Pete Jackson, Bob Fitzsimmons or other great heavyweights of the time might have done the work just as surely as Corbett did. But that is all theory. Corbett DID beat Sullivan, and up to the very moment of the final and knockout blow Sullivan was thought by every man in the United States to be an irresistible champion. To Corbett belongs as great a prize ring glory as might come to any man today who knocked out our modern champion, James J. Jeffries.

Corbett worked his way up to the championship slowly, yet when he did win it his jump to worldwide fame was so meteoric that people forgot his earlier and lesser victories.

CORBETT BORN IN FRISCO.

Jim Corbett was born in Hayes Valley, San Francisco, in 1866. Sullivan, Corbett, Fitzsimmons and Jeffries, the world's champions of the past 20 years, all won their titles in this country. Sullivan, Corbett and Jeffries are American born; Fitzsimmons, a naturalized citizen, was born in Cornwall, of Irish parents.

Corbett's first fighting was as an amateur. But there were few amateurs in his day, and he soon took up the game professionally. At that time he was a clerk in a bank and a member of the Olympic club. His first fights were desperate affairs with bare fists or skin-tight walking gloves. He fought Joe Choynski three times. But for Corbett Choynski might have been a champion himself. The rivalry between the two was keen and close. In one terrible battle, waged on a barge at Benecia, with ordinary walking gloves, Corbett knocked Choynski out after fighting 27 terrible rounds.

That gave him quite a reputation on the coast. He went to New Orleans and defeated Jake Kilrain. Back in California again Corbett took on Peter Jackson. At that time the gigantic black was looked upon as the one man who could give Sullivan himself a fight. Peter was easily the most magnificently built heavyweight I ever saw, and as a boxer had no superiors. Corbett met him in San Francisco. Round after round they fought, Jackson doing little footwork and Corbett going around him like a lightweight. After 20 or 30 rounds of furious milling both men began to tire. Still they fought on, growing weaker and weaker, until, after the fiftieth round neither could hit a hard enough blow to do any great damage. In the sixty-fifth, when they were simply tottering against each other, hands down, unable to lift a glove, the referee stopped the bout and decided it was a draw.

CORBETT'S "REP" MADE.

This fight made Corbett's reputation. In the very next month John L. Sullivan, then touring the country, boxed a 4-round exhibition with Corbett in San Francisco. Corbett easily hit Sullivan and avoided his rushes, but the terror of the great gladiator's name made it hard for even San Francisceans to believe that the slight youngster could stand before him in a real battle.

After the bout Corbett, flushed with excitement, told his friend, Judge Lawlor, that he could whip the champion.

"Jim," said the judge, "you're crazy. Wait awhile."

But Corbett knew more than the men outside the ring. He got a match with Sullivan in New Orleans. Billy Delaney, the best trainer in America then and now, handled him for the battle. Delaney alone thought Corbett had a chance.

On the day before the fight papers all over the land told how the great Sullivan, winding up his training, had burst his leather punching bag with the last furious swing. Friends of Jim Corbett hoped that he wouldn't be killed, and let it go at that.

JIM'S JUDGMENT.

The fight proved Corbett's judgment right. For a few rounds Sullivan rushed with his old fury, expecting to batter down this imprudent novice as he had battered down champions in the past. Corbett deftly, with consummate footwork and blocking such as had never been seen in a ring before, "foiled his wild rage with steady skill." When Sullivan's blows came too fast he broke and slipped away. The crowd hissed and hooted Corbett's ring methods. That was because they didn't understand. Corbett was fighting with a new style, using the ring cleverness he had studied out instead of the savage brute force Sullivan had made popular.

But Sullivan's stamina, undermined by dissipation, began to wane. This was what Corbett had been waiting for. His blows fell on the tottering champion like rain. In the 21 found John L. Sullivan, still conscious but beaten to a pulp, teetered and fell. He knew that he was being counted out, but he could not rise. Corbett was champion of the world.

Instantly the whole country was wild to see the new champion—the man who had accomplished the impossible, who had beaten the invincible champion of all champions. Corbett found himself in an instant placed on the topmost pinnacle of fame.

Until he was whipped by Robert Fritzsimmons at Carson City on the 17th of March, five years later, Jim Corbett lived like the king of the earth.

A GAME SCRAPPER.

Whatever else might be said of Jim Corbett, he was a game fighter. His defeats outnumber his victories, but he never quite in a ring fight. He had Connie McVey jump into the ring to save him from a knockout at the hands of Tom Sharkey, losing the fight on a foul when the battle had already been practically lost. He fought Kid McCoy in New York and the fight was farmed for Corbett to win. Aside from these two instances his record is clean. After the McCoy affair he came back and fought the great Jim Jeffries twice in a manner that redeemed him in the eyes of the sporting world.

In that first fight with Jeffries Corbett tried desperately to regain his old championship. To win that again would have meant a million dollars and a retirement from the ring with honors that would last as long as he lived. Corbett went to the country for six months, changed his mode of life, trained hard and with steady determination. He used all of his famous skill in that battle. For 23 rounds he pecked and jabbed and uppercut at the giant's head and body. The decision was almost in sight. But Jeffries always running in caught him at last with a fearful smash that ended his hopes.

ROLLER SKATES TAKE PLACE OF STREET CARS.

Washington, Oct. 29.—If Merritt O. Chance, chief clerk of the postoffice department, and several of his associates have their way, the national capital will soon be treated to the novelty of a departmental roller skating fraternity. And the asphalt pavements of the "city beautiful," and not the glazed floor of an up-to-date rink, will be the scene of action. It is announced—quietly, of course—that next Monday morning, bright and early, 25 employes of the big postal department, led by the doughty chief clerk, will startle the natives of quiet Mount Pleasant, in the upper part of the city, by appearing at the head of Sixteenth street and forming into a solid phalanx for the initial skate to the office.

Thus will be inaugurated a new epoch in the transportation world. For the new idea is to make a regular practise of utilizing roller skates instead of street cars, and those who are pushing the idea to the front fully expect to have a large following in the near future. "It is simply a matter of breaking the ice," said one of the prospective skaters today. "Once the idea is put into operation, many others will adopt it."

As a matter of fact, all the citizens of Washington who have occasion to use the streets are well aware of the fact that roller skating has been vigorously revived in this city. Sometimes—though only in the case of young folks—it is a positive nuisance, since they are not content to skate on the smooth asphalt streets but insist on utilizing the rougher sidewalks. The department officials and employes, however, have no intention of interfering in the least with pedestrians. They will stick to the "middle of the road" and make things whiz.

Twenty-five busy postal employes undoubtedly will make an impression on the general public that will have some effect. Of course, at the present time this novelty is decidedly experimental. But conventions often are and minute, anyhow, and even ridiculous, especially when somebody wants very much to do something that transgresses them. It is no crime to use roller skates, however, and, according to all lovers of the sport, the pastime is both wholesome and healthful. Those who want to make "roll out doors" as a great skating rink, contend that the use of rollers in the open air must necessarily be much more wholesome and healthful than when the skaters are cooped up in a rink, no matter how commodious it may be.

Wherefore, the 25 bold roller-skating crusaders will break through the bounds of convention, throw caution shrilly to the four winds of Washington Heights, and roll down town in a big bunch. It may be that few, if any of them, would dare to break the ice alone—it really could not be expected even of the athletic chief clerk of the postoffice department and his able and vigorous assistant, to say nothing of the rank and file who have consented to follow their leading. But when all of them put forth their "hay foot" at the same time and start rolling down Sixteenth street hilly-well, then, it's bound to be "different."

One of the skating contingent declares that he will stand for it the first morning with the crowd, but never again will he be so bold. Naughty, naughty! many of the crusaders are of his stamp, for they declare—among themselves always and only—that they will stick to the rollers every day that J. Plutus permits. It may be a shame to take the money from the poor street car companies, but "the boys" think they have been contributing quite long enough to the coffers of Washington's captains of industry.

Mr. Chance has been prominent in all departmental athletics, being one of the prime movers of the baseball league. He knows that a great many folks would skate to and from work right now if they dared. But somebody must rise up like David of old and put to rout the Philistines of convention. Then, with the cobwebs cleared away, even the most timid enthusiast may don his or her skates—and many of the girls want to do so right now—and proceed to business, office or school with impunity, wholly free from the embarrassing finger of scorn which now would be pointed disconcertingly their way.

And this is no idle dream. For arrangements have already been made whereby the pioneer skaters may obtain a high grade make of skates at reduced rates—just to get the novelty properly started. "The boys" mean business, all right, and declare that the rhythmic ring of their rollers will be heard along Sixteenth street on schedul, time Monday morning. They call on all incredulous natives to testify themselves and observe the crusaders brave, in solid phalanx gracefully move along the broad and usually quiet thoroughfare.

Many of the volunteers are big, husky fellows, and not a sallow-checked, flat-chested clerk whom many minds may imagine. It will be a sight to inspire the Washington small boy forever afterwards. And, unless present plans and expectations so sadly awry, scores, and even hundreds, of persons long since past the small stage of development, will follow in the wake of the pioneer skaters.

AT THE AUDITORIUM.

There are two special attractions at the Auditorium rink this week. The first is the reappearance of the La Salles, who give exhibitions of trick and fancy roller skating. They have a new and original act, which consists of a four-round burlesque boxing match on rollers. The other event will be a big mask carnival, scheduled for Thursday evening. Manager O'Mara announces that hereafter the Monday Night club will not have exclusive use of the rink, as the regular patrons made complaints and objected to being barred from the rink on any occasion, hence it was decided to hold no more exclusive sessions.
