PROVO, UTAH. - JAN. 22, 1895.

Assault with a Bottle.

Monday evening, about 8:30 o'clock, Henry Harrison, proprietor of the Eureka saloon, was going home, and when near the corner of Eighth and F streets he was struck upon the forehead with some hard, blunt instrument, and as he staggered and fell to the ground Parley Carter jumped on top of him. Harrison struck at Carter with his hands, and had three of his fingers badly taken by Carter. Some of the neighbors were attracted by Harrison's cries for help, and when they came out Carter ran towards his home. A warrant was issued charging Carter with assault with a deadly weapon with intent to do bodily harm, and he was arrested yesterday morning and brought before Justice DeMoisy and entered a plea of not guilty. He admitted assaulting Harrison but denies having any weapon. Both Harrison and Carter admitting having had trouble in the saloon. Justice DeMoisy held Carter to await the action of the grand jury in the sum of $500. It is believed Harrison was struck with an empty bottle which was found near the place of the assault and which Carter admits he dropped.

Members of the [illegible] of [illegible] and the present county officials, together with many ex-officials, escorted the remains from the residence to the tabernacle, where a large congregation attended the services. The cortege which followed the remains to the cemetery was unusually large.

Gamblers Arrested.

There has been considerable gambling going on in this city of late; two places have been conducting games and apparently doing a big business. On Monday eleven gamblers and [illegible] were arrested. The parties deposited cash bail for their appearance before City Justice Wedgwood today. Some of the complaints were sworn to by City Prosecuting Attorney Whitecotton, who went into one of the rooms Friday night and participated in a game of faro for a short time, to the evident delight of the crowd present.

Grinding Oats.

Generally speaking, the grinding of grain for fattening stock in the open yards is not followed to a great extent in the western states. But when the object is to put on the greatest amount of fat in as short a time as possible, Prairie Farmer says that grinding no doubt can be done with profit. An animal requires a positive amount of food for maintenance, and the greater the amount of food consumed and turned into fat or muscle, without waste, the sooner the animal may be put upon the market, and consequently with a proportionately less cost. In grinding oats, as compared with [illegible], for milk cows Professor Well found that cows [illegible] did better [illegible] yield when [illegible] oats and [illegible] And the average for six cows was a gain of about 10 per cent in milk and milk fat in favor of ground oats. In another [illegible] conducted at the [illegible] station in 1893 it was found that when two-thirds of the ration consisted of ground oats and one-third screened, 410 pounds of food resulted in 100 pounds gain as against 100 pounds gain with 407 pounds of food when the ration consisted of a mixture of one-third ground oats and two-thirds screened.
