BOOK AGENT FOR A DAY.

EXPERIENCES OF AN EASTERN COLLEGE MAN IN MISSOURI.

Stranded in Kansas City He Finds a Friend Who Initiates Him Into the Beauties of Selling Books and Making a Fortune in a Few Years.

Yes, I once figured as a book agent. You think I am joking, but it is a fact, I assure you. I actually represented a big publishing company for one whole day.

It was in the summer of 18[illegible]. I was stranded in Kansas City and I was sadly short of money. I owed two weeks' board and I was even forced to smoke other fellows' cigarettes. [illegible]

STORY OF AN EX-BRAKEMAN.

Driven from His Position by Horrors Incidental to His Calling.

"I was a brakeman on the Hudson road before I entered the ministry," said a well known Brooklyn preacher to me, "but it was only for a little while. It proved to be a horrible calling. It was only a few days after I had been installed in my position when I received the first shock to my nerves. We were just on the point of crossing a small bridge that spanned a shallow stream of water when I heard the whistle blown for 'down brakes.'

"I put on the brake as hard as I could and then looked ahead of the train. I was just in time to see a man running for his life across the bridge on a narrow board footway. The train was slowly losing its momentum, but it was too late to save the man from death, for just as he had about reached a place of safety the engine hit him and he was knocked over into the water.

"When the train had been stopped we went down and recovered the poor fellow's corpse. His skull had been clearly split in two and the water had washed out his brains. The body was placed in the baggage car, on which I worked, and I was forced to gaze upon the ghastly spectacle until we reached the next station, where the dead man was turned over to the authorities.

"As if that were not enough to produce a lasting horrible impression upon my mind, I received another and perhaps more frightful shock two weeks later. It was on the same bridge. I again heard the dreaded signal for 'down brakes.' This time I put all the strength I could command into my effort and kept the brake up to the last notch I was able to force it to. The next instant the chain broke, and the train, which was gradually being halted, bounded forward with new impetus and another man was killed.

"It seems that he had tried to save himself by clasping his hands over one [illegible]

"That settled it with me, and I resigned my place forthwith. I have not touched a brake since that day."—New York Herald.
