WHERE'S BARNARD?

The Supposed Murder in Emigration Canyon in 1892.

THE INQUEST HEARING TODAY.

Threats Alleged to Have Been Made by Body and Engelbrecht—A Double Game.

The United space which Commissioner Parks is occupying in the Commercial building affords little room to accommodate the crowd of witnesses and others who were present at the preliminary hearing in Willie Body and Harvey Engelbrecht this morning, as adjournment was made to County Attorney Williams's office and any spectators to the new county building, whence nearly every interested witness repaired. It was after eight o'clock when the inquiry began.

The defendants are charged with the wilful murder of Albert Barnard, at the right hand fork of Emigration canyon, on July 13th, 1892. The date relative to Barnard's mysterious disappearance and the arrest of the two defendants were stated in the News last week.

The prosecution is represented by County Attorney Williams and Assistant Attorney Dan Hemingway. Judge Dey appears for Body and Attorney J. H. Rowe for Engelbrecht.

Geo Hodgson, of Lake Shore, was the first witness. He said that some time in August, 1892, he went from Brighton to the Star and saw Hamilton alle. Witness reported some hay on the farm and when one of the men said nay said. He said he could be sure about it, but he had a few words to Engelbrecht to the end canyon and he heard the illicit would be in the time. He was detailed the man who had pressed hay—had he was about half filled, but he did not give the man's name. There was a little boy, between ten and twelve years old, with deceased at the time, and it was between 2 and 3 o'clock in the afternoon. He had known Engelbrecht for a long time before this. When witness proceeded on his way he left Engelbrecht sitting by the roadside. He saw no Engelbrecht several times close, but the defendants did not again come to the canyon notice.

George Henry Wiggins, city, testified that he knew Engelbrecht. In March, 1894, he met him nearly every day, and subsequently. The defendants, while they were scrambling together in Lake Shore, said the last time he could "Guess Body up;" they had ceremonly call a quarrel. He stated that Body winked and had the Engelbrecht hold he was deeply interested and then jumped upon him with his spade. Witness asked him whether he was, say Body, hurt, and he replied that he was and that they left him nearly insensible. He did not say the reason of the quarrel with the sleepwalker; he stated that he thought took no part in the fight, but stood by and looked on.

"Did he say what the result of those injuries to Barnard were?" asked the county attorney.

"I cannot tell you his very words," answered witness, "but he said it was reported that the man was dead. He told me afterwards that he knew he was not dead, and that he was in Lodo bending sleep."

"Did he tell afterwards anything about his going up there and helping to carry Barnard and his dog?"

The witness did not remember anything of that kind, but added, "he told me that Frank and his son (the Hodgs) went out in the night and came back before daylight. He did not say what they went for, but that they had killed the dog."

Engelbrecht afterwards came to witness and said he must not think him a bad man, as all those reports about him were not true."

In reply to Attorney Hard, witness said he could not fix the time when the fighting occurred to hour, but it was some time in the latter part of February or in March, 1894.

"You would not undertake to swear to exactly what was said by Engelbrecht?"

"My memory is not strong enough to give the exact words."

"Wm. Naylor, an elderly man, who resides in the city, said he owned a ranch at Mountain Dell. In the latter part of July, 1892, Barnard, the missing man, was working for him. The sheep camp was in Emigration canyon. Barnard, he believed on the 13th of July, came to the ranch early in the morning and stated that two boys had been beating him. After eating the dinner he complained of his back, upon which there was a bump about as big as a cocoa nut. Witness pitched upon Engelbrecht and Body as the men who had beaten Barnard that day. It could not have been caused by a stone from a rock. He saw no blood marks upon the person. He did not know if he had sustained any other injuries. He left Barnard at the ranch. He was deadly sick. Barnard was about an hour and a half at the house after. Barnard had gone two days before Engelbrecht and Body had been working for him. He was then sick. He said he was sick and complained of his back. Witness could not know them again. He never saw Barnard again from that day to this.

To Judge Dey witness said there was no blood upon Barnard when he came to the house. Witness could not swear to the exact day and date, but it was a holiday, certainly or something of that sort, because they had company there.

Wilford W. Naylor, son of the witness, said Barnard came to the ranch about midsummer and went away, said he was sick. He said he had been beaten by two men. He did not say what men. He said he was deadly sick. He said he was sick and complained of his back. He said he was sick and complained of his back. He said he was sick and complained of his back
