THE FIRST WINTER.

That the Mormon Pioneers came to Utah under a religious influence and leadership, and found frequent occasion to acknowledge the interposition of Providence in their behalf, often has been noted; and at the present time the recalling of another instance of the goodness of the Lord to them, in "tempering the wind to the shorn lamb," is an interesting reminiscence. The fact has been referred to on previous occasions, but the following recital of it, made by W. F. Nuttall of this city to the News today, is worthy of note. Said:

During the fall of 1847 a warm northwesterly wind blew much of the time. It was altogether different in character from the winds from that direction experienced here since then, the latter being invariably cold. From what I have heard of the chinook winds from the Pacific coast that they are at times felt as far east as the Snake River, it would seem that the wind that winnowed was of the same character. Whether the chinook wind at that time reached from Salt Lake valley or not, it was very fortunate for the weary soldiers that the mild southwesterly wind which did blow was of a modifying nature. The following winter was the mildest experienced in Great Salt Lake valley since its settlement, there being no century weather to speak of till the month of March. If this first winter had been as severe as even the average one since then, there would have been fearful loss of cattle, as for lack of shelter the people would have suffered severely, and possibly some would have perished. Now, was this economic, or was it a special providence of God to one half of a number of His children, just then in circumstances to specially need His interposition in tempering the wind and modifying the weather to suit the necessities of their condition? Naturally the Latter-day Saints, especially the Pioneers, recognized it as a special providence of God in their behalf, and they did and will be grateful to Him for it at special seasons at that time.

FOR THE BETTERMENT OF MAN.

The latest absurdity is, it seems, a society for the purpose of improving the human race by means of "scientific" marriages and the killing of such offspring as is physically or mentally weak. According to the New York World it was organized by a couple of young persons who met last year, married each other for the sake of science and organized the society mentioned. They are described, but as insane persons or cranks (wild-eyed visionaries, but as well bred, well educated, with charming, agreeable manners and a great deal of serious interest in the betterment of humanity.

The organization has the following planks in its platform:

First—Love is the result of certain strong senses, and is brought about artificially as well as naturally.

Marriage is to be entered into consciousness gravely that it, men and women should marry their mates on physical and moral adaptation.

Marriage between persons who have any disease which may be transmitted to posterity, or with any strong hereditary blood taint, is to be strictly prohibited by law, also the marriage of unmated men and women.

All candidates for matrimony must submit to a moral and physical examination by duly physicians appointed for the purpose.

Second—All badly deformed, insane and contaminated diseased children should be promptly destroyed within three months after said disease or deformity has been by three sane physicians pronounced incurable.

Third—All children should be educated under the immediate supervision of the state from the time the child is five years old until it reaches its fifteenth year.

Fourth—The education of all children should be, first, physical, second, moral, third, social. The children to be allowed to choose any religion when they fifteen years, but not before, so as to that are their power of judgment and discrimination are not still hardly developed.

Fifth—All aged, mentally sound persons to be cared for at the expense of the state.

Sixth—Every person being permanently the use of two senses should be peaceably disposed of by the state.

Seventh—All mentally insane persons to be electrocuted.

Another plank declares against capital punishment of murderers on the ground that the penalty is too merciful and also because nobody has a right to take the life of a physically sound human being.

The organization is interesting chiefly as showing to what pseudo-philosophic lengths men and women will go when actuated by a desire to remedy the abnormal conditions of mankind and lift to the resources of their own wisdom to find remedies. They would even lay the hands (but not a smaller number) and destroy the very instruments on which society depends for its existence (but which they are compared to the principles enunciated by the founders of the Church, the divine inspiration of the latter is most clearly seen. To them and their followers, the remedy sought is to be found, not in trying down, but in uplifting. They plumber out the enobling power of religion by the inherent ship of spirits to an existence before this, and the eternal nature of the sweetness existence. To these Russian beliefs are sparks of the Divine system, from the eternal light and destined to have fuller. That to which philosophy, and only the real system of that great truth and inherent condition of all human family. There is to be a Gilead as of yore, and it is not more easy to cast strange gods for beasts and insects.

RUSSIA AS A REFUGE SAVIOR.

There is much in economic life for the study of the Russian, and for the reason of that not being so in Russia and methods. It is true that in Russia receive the people are treated as a child as and guiding hand, but it is also equally true that generally the Russian does not get credit for the sagacity and independence which is displayed by it. The moral character of the country, however, is especially worthy of this to the fact that not only is the great authority vested in a considerable connection to other European nations as a military force, but the Russian actually discourage all other European powers in the matter of developing our far-off possession, being among the chief concerned in the establishment that, and was suppose the remainder of Europe in her actual (or real) population. The one feature to be seized by the fact of Russia possessions forming one continuous territory, and the other by the remarkable security of the race. Nevin Viney, of Pittsburg, gives some interesting facts and figures of the late census, as mentioned in Liberty Bell.

The population of the Russian empire is now 129,000,000, double as Germany, Austria-Hungary, the provinces of France combined, or twice as much as Great Britain and Ireland, and more than three times as much as the United States. The rate of increase is as high as the European powers. There are one million more than was over 100,000 inhabitants, and nearly five million over 50,000 population. Middle Asia has shown the greatest progress in the record. In the whole country, St. Petersburg, of course, is the first place in Europe, with a population of 1,267,000. Next comes Moscow, with a population of 988,610, Warsaw, within the days of Poland's independence but only about 50,000 rank, one now 614,152 inhabitants. Odessa is the fourth town, which its growth is even more remarkable, it has 404,851 inhabitants, which a century ago was but a fishing village. The Sea city [illegible] is next most noticeable of Riga, by the way, is Lodz, in Poland, a busy manufacturing center, with a population of 314,700. The census shows that there are 64,256,000 males and 64,004,654 females. The government employed 150,000 officials to take the census, which was completed in three months.

A showing of the kind made bring forward very substantial reasons why Russia wields such an influence in European affairs, and why even the old great powers combined hesitate to antagonize the government of the czar.

A PIONEER'S GRANDDAUGHTER.

Fifty years ago, June 21, the first of the Pioneer company of Mormons entered the Great Salt Lake Valley. Two of the last, Elders Orson Pratt and Erastus Snow, came down from the canyon beach, rode out towards the lake, examined the prospect, and returned to report to the vanguard of the Pioneers, who camped that night about a mile and a half to Emigration canyon. But on their coming over the hill towards the valley, Erastus Snow and his pack horse some distance in the rear, which he had dropped. Orson Pratt continued his exploration, and was the first of the Pioneers to enter the valley.

On July 21 last (a year of a century later), and midway between the first named date and today, a granddaughter of Orson Pratt, the Pioneer, was born in this city. The baby—she will pardon us for telling her age, and the circumstances—is now a year old, and is the only person in the State who can claim the distinction of celebrating her birthday from the quarter-centennial period when the member, the first active one, who came to this valley with the pioneer of 1847 is still living, and is a resident of this city. Mrs. Lee A. Tracy, mentioned, has her office in 50—304 Auditorium.

Particular inquiries made in the office of the Deseret News, 29 and 31 Main.
