BRYAN'S ACCEPTANCE.

The letter of Hon. Wm. J. Bryan, accepting the nomination of the Democratic party as its candidate for President of the United States, published in Wednesday's NEWS, is not so long but that every citizen who truly recognizes his responsibility as an elector should take the time to read it. Although his letter is brief, that is not a point of objection to it, for he covers the whole ground, and in concise and emphatic language plants himself squarely on the platform adopted by the Democratic convention at Chicago in July. However anyone may disagree with the Democratic nominee as to any political view he may have, all must unite in recognizing the fact that he states his position clearly and without equivocation, so that none who desire to take issue with him will be at a loss to understand his precise views.

In the opening sentences of his letter Mr. Bryan expresses his intention, if elected to the position of chief magistrate, to use the office in a way to prove worthy of the confidence of the nation, and declares his determination not to be a candidate for re-election. Then he states his unqualified endorsement of the entire Democratic platform, and points out the advantages of a government of the people. He next declares in favor of the enforcement of the laws, insisting that this should be done by the national government with due consideration for the rights of each state.

The financial question then is brought forward in several phases. The declaration is made for economy in the administration of public affairs, and the issuing of bonds in time of peace is roundly criticised and opposed. The present administration's policy of redeeming its obligations in one coin only—gold—when the law provides for such redemption in either gold or silver coin, or both, is condemned as leaving the government at the mercy of those who find a pecuniary profit in bonds; and the declaration is made that the government, when administered in the interest of the whole people, is able to establish and enforce its financial policy not only without the aid of syndicates but in spite of their opposition. The issue of paper money by national banks is opposed, and the government's issue of greenbacks endorsed.

The Monroe doctrine comes next for pointed approval, as the best guarantee of peace with other nations. Pensions to deserving soldiers and sailors of the nation are upheld. It is declared that labor creates capital, and the pledge is made to enact such legislation as will protect the masses in the enjoyment of political rights and of their just share of the reward of their labor. Arbitration in labor difficulties is advocated as being in the interest of government and society. Immigration of criminals or contract labor is opposed; trial by jury in contempt cases is commended; trusts are vigorously denounced; the right of the government to regulate interstate commerce is reasserted, and an extension of power is urged for the interstate commerce commission; and the prosecution of the government claims against the Pacific railways is demanded.

Sympathy is expressed by Mr. Bryan for Cuba in the struggle there for political freedom. Life tenure of office under civil service rules is condemned as not being in harmony with American institutions. Statehood for the territories, and home rule for those which remain in territorial condition, are declared for by Mr. Bryan, as is also the reservation of public lands for settlement by citizens; and the improvement of the waterways of the country by a system of continuing appropriations is upheld.

The tariff question is not discussed, Mr. Bryan expressing the opinion that it is not necessary at this time. He says that the American people will not consent to the consideration of any other important question until the money problem is settled, on which he says delay is impossible.

There is no discussion in the letter of the free coinage of silver as the solution of the money problem. The remark is made that, having discussed portions of the party platform at the time of its adoption and again when he was formally notified, Mr. Bryan did not deem it necessary to again enter upon the coinage subject further than to declare that in the presence of that overshadowing issue differences upon minor questions must be laid aside, in order to secure united action to stay the progress toward a universal gold standard, and to establish in its place the double standard of gold and silver coinage.

Again we recommend a careful perusal of this letter of acceptance; and now that the issues have been fairly joined in the letters from the two leading candidates for the Presidency, a critical comparison of the points at issue should be made by the voter, that when election day comes around each ballot cast may have behind it the force of a conviction that comes through the intelligent action of a discriminating, conscientious mind.

STRONG FOR COMMUNISM.

The issues union congress which has been holding its sessions in Edinburgh, Scotland, represents millions of members in Great Britain, so that its expressions may be taken to mean something because of the force behind them. At its Wednesday session the congress adopted a resolution which is a modification of what is known as the Kier Hardie demand of two years ago. This demand was for an absolute communism so far as it could be attained through governmental measures, and in its extreme requirement was wholly impracticable even in the minds of the trades union members themselves. The new resolution, however, comes into a more practical form, while scarcely less far-reaching in its effects. It demands the nationalization of the land, mines, minerals, royalty, rents and railways, stopping there instead of including all means of production, distribution and exchange; it also demands that all water, artificial light and tramway undertakings be municipalized.

The aim of the resolution as it now is can be comprehended readily by the British workman, and is probably in harmony with the views of nine-tenths of the trades union members on that subject; hence is liable to receive much more attention in the way of efforts at introduction than ever seems to be hoped for the other idea. It is that the towns and cities shall own and operate all water, artificial light and street railway plants, and that private enterprise shall be kept out of these fields; the further and broader provision is that the general government shall own and control all the land, the mines, the minerals, all royalties and rents, and all railways in Great Britain, preventing individual ownership in any of these.

Under such a solution the vast tenantry system in Great Britain would be swept away and a new one be instituted, with the government as the great landlord; the immense coal mine corporations would give way to national manipulation of those interests; and the great railroad systems would come in the possession of the crown for public operation. In a smaller governmental way, municipal corporations would control the larger enterprises within their boundaries. The effect would be to remove from a greater part of their present field of operations all the great aggregations of capital, yet would leave them some important lines in the way of manufacture and trade.

That such a great change can be wrought, even with the voice of millions behind it, does not seem probable in this country at least, even with the rapidly-moving order of things which now prevails. But the attempt to secure it leaves no doubt of the trend of the masses of the people; and Britain is not alone in the movement. It points to a preparation of the public mind for the introduction at the communistic idea in government. It is crude, imperfect, and perhaps impracticable, so far as its institution by human agency is concerned. The Lotteries States can see, however, in the tendency thus shown the opening of the way for an order with which, as a religious principle, they are familiar, as being associated with the Millennial reign for which all Christian people are looking.

THE CATHOLICS IN AMERICA.

The Kölnische Zeitung devotes a long article to the conditions in the United States and endeavors to prove that the greatest menace to the Republic is the growing influence of the Roman hierarchy, a danger all the more threatening because of the feeling of security with which the American people regards their republican institutions. The article is condensed for the Literary Digest and contains many interesting points.

The author argues that it always has been the aim of the Roman hierarchy to extend its power at the expense of secular authority and that the United States is no exception to this rule. In proof of this he quoted the encyclical issued in Baltimore in 1884 "An oath need not be kept if it is pointed against the interests of the Roman Catholic church. A promise of this kind is not to be considered as an oath." Bishop Gilmour of Cleveland is quoted as saying in March, 1893: "The nations must learn to subjugate themselves to the dictates of religion. We must learn to be Catholics first and citizens next."

Among other points adduced are cited the following:

Pius IX., in his syllabus of December 8, 1864, declared: "It is a mistake to believe that, in a conflict between church and state, the decisions can be given according to civil law."

Leo XIII., in his pastoral letter of January 10, 1895, addressed the American Catholics as follows: "It is wrong to break the commandments of the church in order to obey the laws. Pius IX. says: 'If there is a conflict between the rules of the state and those of the church, if the decisions of the church are the best of the authority of the people doubted, it is a duty to oppose the laws of the state, and careful to adhere to those.'"

Pope Leo also decrees that the church is superior from politics, and the General Vicar Preol was said in 1893: "American Catholics other think that the supremacy of the church is restricted to matters of faith. They is entirely and disloyal. You have no right to think as you please, you must look like Catholics. Whoever says 'I will take my faith from St. Peter, but not my politics' is not a true Catholic."

In a pastoral letter from Pope Leo dated November 7, 1895, the American Catholics are urged "to do everything in their power to change the Constitution of these states in accordance with the principles of the true church."

The Catholic church at present exercises a vast power in this country. In 1883 there were 16 archbishops, 70 bishops, 8,084 priests and 2,722 theological students and 9,469,190 Catholic members. The church has 5,812 churches, 4,736 chapels, 1 university, 27 seminaries, 515 high schools, 337 academies and 5,610 parochial schools with 705,498 pupils.

At the head of this multitude stands the pope's ambassador, whose power is thus defined in the papal decree:

We command all whom this may concern to acknowledge you, our apostolic ambassador, as the supreme power. We command them to render you fealty, assistance, and obedience in all things, and to desist with due reverence your commands. Whatever we shall ordain, you pronounce, whatever punishment you may inflict upon those who oppose your authority, we confirm it, so according to the power God has conferred upon us, and we will use our authority to obtain obedience and satisfaction, though it may cause a conflict with the constitutions, with apostolic precept, or any other rules.

The author closes with the prediction of a Paris professor of social economy that the time is near at hand when the Catholic church will be called to lead in the administration, at the instance of the people, and continues:

Those who doubt this need only glance at South America, where the United States of Colombia present a case in point. Under the influence of his strictly Catholic wife President Uribe turned over all the schools, sanitaries, all the charity organizations, hospitals, nunneries, and libraries of the country to the Catholic hierarchy. The liberals fought for their rights, but were beaten during the civil war which lasted four years.

The United States, too, will have to face the question whether Catholic or liberalism should rule. Who will be the victor it is impossible to determine. This much, however, is certain: the struggle will not tremendous sacrifices and it will endanger the existence of the United States.

Concerning the views here set forth opinions may differ. Some will doubtless regard them as the prejudiced utterances of an alarmist. The author fails to point out a remedy against the supposed danger. What would he have us do? The day is past, fortunately, when persecution is considered proper and effective. Besides, a general crusade against any church would be as much contrary to the Constitution of this country as are the alleged plots of the Roman hierarchy.

It is safe to say that the free institutions of this country will stand firm as the rock just as long as the people are resolved to keep them in perfect harmony with the Constitution framed by the fathers. If they are ever torn from the hands of the nation and given to a faction it is because the nation, forgetful of the sacred trust, has rendered itself unworthy of being its guardian.

NOTING THE nomination of "Tim" Campbell as the "honest money" candidate for Congress in New York, on the activity of the notorious Mayor "Pat" Gleason of Long Island City for the same cause, the Boston Herald cautiously observes that "the friends of sound finance are not going to be too particular about their allies in this fight." Among other allies, concerning whom it will not do to be too particular, is John Most, the great anarchist. And yet "the friends of sound finance" persist in calling Mr. Bryan and his adherents demagogues and anarchists.

WHAT A PROMINENT INSURANCE MAN SAYS.

H. M. Blossom, senior member of H. M. Blossom & Co., 217 N. 3d St., St. Louis, writes: I had been left with a very distressing cough, the result of influenza, which nothing would relieve, until I took Ballard's Horehound Syrup. One bottle completely cured me. I sent one bottle to my sister, who had a severe cough, and she experienced immediate relief. I always recommend this syrup to my friends.

John Cranston, 908 Hampshire street, Quincy, Ills., writes: I have found Ballards Horehound Syrup superior to any other cough medicine I have ever known. It never disappoints. Price 50c.
