ALL FOR THE BEST.

Those who are given to or of necessity do their rising early these morning days don't need to consult a thermometer to realize that the winter king holds high and undisputed sway, the degree indicated hovering closely about the zero mark all the time and occasionally taking a dip below. Everything that can be frozen is frozen, the ice and for a foot in depth at least included. This with the repeated snowfalls we have had of late and the comparatively moderate temperature at all times before midnight and after sunrise, makes the finest sleighing to be found anywhere in the land. Those who have no sleigh, or having that have nothing to draw it with, or having neither and can't wait an hour or thereabout for a street car—a very common occurrence of late—can use the means provided by nature and walk; and those who do but little of this don't know how much they are missing. The air is so condensed and so pure these mornings that a few inhabitants, deep and prolonged, are the most bracing and healthful tonic that ever entered the human system; while the general effect of a good long walk immediately after breakfast, unless the walker is too unwell generally to stand it, imparts to one the vigor of a steam engine, and is one of the best remedies for weak lungs, imperfect circulation and therefore disordered livers, that could be desired.

Nature is constantly doing something for us that we do not appreciate. If we could only realize how good the universal mother is, even when she frowns and seems perverse and even forbidding, there would not be so many complaints. The keen and howling blasts which she sometimes sends across the north and east benches make the houses tremble as well as the people inside of them, if they are at all nervous, and many can see, or rather hear, in such visitations only a source of harm, annoyance and fear; that the winds do produce these vexatious conditions is undeniable, and those who have experienced them are not anxious for a repetition, no matter how hardy they may be or affect to be. But there is a silver lining to even this dark cloud. If there are any lingering impurities or seeds of disease in the all-pervading element, it seems reasonable to suppose that if it be put in motion violently such germs will be scattered if not driven away; while if is as true of air as of water that it requires action to become pure and free itself from abnoxious elements; certainly no impurities can be visited upon us through the breeze which are brewed in the very mountain tops, perhaps amid the never-ending snows and are filtered through crevices and crannies where the nourishing hand of civilization has never been.

We have been visited with rather more than the usual quantity of snow for this time of the year, and for pedestrians—made more numerous by reason of the disappointments previously spoken of—it becomes a very irksome not to say irksome task to go from point to point at times; while a heavy snowfall coming with an inclination of a few degrees in the opposite direction causes unpleasant feelings and gives rise at times to unpleasant thoughts. Yet, as between such annoyance and paying double price for the necessaries of life next year, we should not hesitate very long in making choice of the annoyance. The snow does not accumulate very fast nor to a great extent down here among the habitations of man; but up among the natural reservoirs, where it can never be reached by us, it remains steadfastly and each snowfall means so much more added to the fund upon which we can draw at our greatest need, during the heated atmosphere of another summer and when the growing crops must have moisture with at least semi-regularity, or perish.

It has been wisely and truly said that

> This world is not so bad a world
> As some would make it;
> But whether good or whether bad
> Depends on how we take it.

WHAT IS DOING AT BRUSSELS.

There is more going on at the Brussels conference than we, who are so far away, know of. The telegraphic reports are more meager than usual—much more so than would be the case if it were the amount of some great scandal or preparations for a "fist" prize fight that was being sent. We have to rely more largely upon the press and the mails than usual, just as though the Brussels gathering were not one of the most important international affairs ever called into existence.

At a recent sitting, Prof. Andrews, one of the delegates from the United States, made a strong appeal for silver. He thinks we have not, and are not at present likely to have, a dollar in silver beyond our needs in the United States. "We have no idea of soliciting any favor from the people of Europe. What we desire is as much to Europe's interests as to ours. We wish to multiply our trade with the world. This can never be successfully accomplished as long as two great groups of nations continue to drift apart. We will not forever remain one whose the task of sustaining the price of silver. If Europe is not enough interested in the matter to cooperate with us, we will soon decrease our annual purchases of silver, and begin to provide by recruiting our currency by issues of paper. The next Congress is nearly certain to open procedure in that direction. We will not give up our gold."

There is some satisfaction, because some thing direct, explicit and to the point, in that kind of language. And there was a good deal more of the same kind at the same time, all of which we on this side of the water and in this part of the western world can readily understand.

Senator Jones had the floor yesterday. What he says or has said will be looked for with interest over here.

CHURCH INFLUENCE IN TEXAS.

The awful bugbear of church interference in state affairs, phantasm as it is, is trotted out so frequently here in Utah that sensible people have ceased to take any notice of it, and scarcely anybody's interest can be awakened for any phase of the subject, even where it may be an actuality. We note, for instance, that Texas, whose ecclesiastic seldom escape the jibes and criticisms of the argus-eyed press of the rest of the country, has a well-developed scandal in this line, concerning which hardly a word has been said. It appears that a colored preacher in that vast commonwealth has come forward with a complaint to the effect that Governor Hogg refuses to reimburse him for certain election expenses incurred in the governor's interest. Such a complaint must of course be based on a confession as to what caused the expenses; and the dusky brother makes it without hesitation. He not only used his ministerial influence to get votes for Mr. Hogg but he engaged in a mercantile transaction with sundry thrifty members of his flock by which they, in consideration of a sum of money ranging from 75 cents in some instances to $1,500 in others, were to deposit the ballots supplied them by the pastor. He prepared the tickets and his followers voted them—a proceeding which, according to the terms of the agreement heretofore referred, cost him the modest sum of $60.00. This Governor Hogg now refuses to pay, not whether because he finds he did not need the votes, or because he divulges previous knowledge of any such bargain, deponent saith not. If the former, justice-loving people everywhere will say he is acting real mean; if the latter, the zealous preacher ought to be thankful if his enthusiasm costs him no more than the $60.00 already laid out. In either case, however, the priestly buyer and seller of ballots would seem to be upon the dilemma's pointed horns; and in view of his holy profession, would he not play the part of consistency and discretion by paying the beam out of his own eye before bewailing the visual obstruction of Mr. Hogg?

HE MUST BE MISTAKEN.

There are few men in this life who stand higher in public esteem or are freer from partisan assaults than George Washington Childs, founder and editor of the Philadelphia Ledger. He it was whose establishment was nearly destroyed by fire recently and whose paper appeared as usual, not a number being missed; however, this is no unusual thing in American journalism and is only spoken of incidentally. The thing more than anything else that strikes the general reader is the proposition of how it is that a man of Mr. Childs' well-known beneficence and good feeling toward all mankind could find it in his heart to say that the fire was the deliberate work of an incendiary, when there is no evidence supporting such a statement. He should remember that fires in large buildings are oftener than otherwise of very mysterious origin, probably because the builders left a flaw somewhere or because of one or more of a myriad of possible things we know not of. And he should not so underrate himself, the proud position he has gained by merit alone, nor the record of good he has done for others as to say or believe that there is any one in the world who would knowingly cause him such loss and harm. Certainly there are no grounds for vengeful feelings toward him; anarchists are not numerous in Philadelphia, and if they were there are other targets for their mischief much more inviting than the Ledger or its benevolent proprietor; and if it had been the work of an insane person detection would have been easy and certain. On second thought, Mr. Childs will hardly persist in that statement, we think; it was not like him to say it in the first place, and after the lapse of so much time with no evidence to persist in it would be unbecoming.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Whatever may be thought by sober people concerning the methods of the late phase of militant Christianity that marches under the banner of the Salvation Army, no one will deny that the motives actuating its exponents and the results as seen in its members are calculated to improve the condition of the most fallen of mankind. As a agency for good it is therefore entitled to respectful consideration, and so far as it accomplishes reform by entering fields at whose confines others shrink, and rescuing to a better life a class whose interest could not be aroused by a less demonstrative form of worship, it merits the aid, at least the sympathy, of every humanitarian whose existence at the degradation to it's world is not diminished by the fact that he has no remedy for it. We may have our doubts as to the acceptability of war—a form of worship to the lowly Teacher whose walk and talk among men were an example of gentleness and perfection, and who gave His life that we might live. He was not the combative spirit, nor were his followers designated by any term of foolish to military or caricature of war. Still, the effect that would lead and does lead a fellow mortal to a better life may not be despised, no matter what its source; it can be praised for this much if for much or more, that it at least lifts its benefactor to a plane where further progress toward a true, pure ideal is not so hopeless an undertaking.

For ourselves, speaking now of all the seeds, which, "having a form of godliness, deny the power thereof," whose creeds are man-made and whose observances are a mere matter of convenience, we cannot see that the Salvation Army is less entitled to consideration, toleration and respect than the most pretentious among them. It at least goes at the business of soul saving in an our next, practical way, and the difference between its methods and those of the average Christian, even as viewed by newspaper organs of the latter, is too exceptionally to be altogether ignored. We quote from one of those organs, the New York Observer:

> The average Christian gives a hungry man on the street a dime for a supper or a night's lodging. He cannot afford to pay for a lodging at a respectable hotel, and the man would not go home with him if he was asked. But mission-manned or not, he buys a drink with the dime, for every cheap restaurant has a saloon attachment. The Salvation Army takes the same man to a warm room, gives him a supper, and then provides companions for his mind and heart. It has a prayer-meeting, in which brass horns and tambourines take a prominent part, and the hymns are sung to tunes which he has often heard used in other words. But it is only in that way that a religious emotion can be excited in his sinful heart. It would not be the way or the average Christian, but it is the way in which the people the Salvation Army is trying so successfully to reach can be reached and saved. It is not one to say, either, that the being thus aroused is only momentary in its action, for in a was number of cases the genuineness of the conversions cannot be questioned.

All of which, being true, constitutes, as stated already, at least one reason why the work of the Army, with all its clamorous and pageantry, can be sympathized with and in a measure encouraged and applauded by all save the bigoted and the pharisaical.

ROBBERY IS RIFE.

The World's Fair city is having a hard time of it with the lawless gangs which make it their headquarters thus far in advance of the big show, and the question now is where it will end and how. In addition to the open and nefarious work of the highwaymen it seems as if robberies of various kinds were rife and nobody is safe, not even the policemen. The papers cry out against it, call on the officers for increased vigilance and treat the subject editorially in all manner of ways—denunciation, reproach, ridicule, expostulation and calm reasoning, but all to no purpose; the bold burglar still "burgles," the footpad makes his all but regular nocturnal calls, the road agent is as audacious as ever, and even the various departments of sneak thieving seem to be doing a flourishing business.

A recent issue of the Chicago News Record, after moralizing on the last named branch of the subject, says such reflections are called up by the report of an alleged attempt on the part of an "investment company" to beguile young women clerking in big stores on a weekly wage into placing their money in a lottery scheme. Like all lottery schemes, this one, it is said, has but one prize drawing—and that is made by the company. Money disappears in its "investments" as water vanishes through a sieve. Yet are there many—men as well as women—who cannot resist the specious promises of quick wealth by any scheme whatsoever. If, as is said, several of Chicago's young salesswomen have been cheated out of their dollars it is because they did not pause to think that "investment companies" are not lying awake nights thinking how to make other people rich.

The antidote for the specific complaint herein outlined is contained in the last two lines; if people would only use such judgment as they have, or at least not rely exclusively upon that of people who have a scheme on hand, the design of which is to secure them something for nothing, there would be less of that class of robbery committed. There are too many of our race who are as harmless as a dove without being as wise as a serpent.

NEW YORK ONLY INCIDENTAL.

The winner in the presidential race this year was not elected against the vote of New York, though he could have been, even as he was nominated in the face of the Empire state's protest. It deserves to be noted that five Presidents have been inducted into the White House without the aid of New York in the electoral college: George Washington in 1789, who was not deprived of the vote through opposition, but because the Empire state did not participate in the election; James Madison in 1816, James Buchanan in 1856, U. S. Grant in 1868 and R. B. Hayes in 1876; and it will be a happy day for American politics when the machine domination in that great state ceases to exert its all-overpowering influence on the national result which the times and a great many of the people have thought necessary to exert it with. In other words, the more New York ceases to be the pivotal state where vote carries the presidential nominee to the candidate receiving it, the better for purity of election methods and for the country at large.

The Canada book cure matrimonially inclined is supposed to get not only the young lady and her parents' consent but that of his employers as well. A Montreal paper says a book keeper in one of the banks of that city was recently dismissed because he took unto himself a wife without the consent of the officials. This leads a humorous times to observe some performances.

The thoughtful man may be known these mornings by his possession and employment of our snuffs.
