THAT LIBEL SUIT.

Of course there was no surprise to Judge Powers, his attorneys, the DESERET NEWS company, its attorneys, or anybody else, in the decision of Judge Zane yesterday with reference to the libel suit instituted by the doughty Tuscarora chieftain against the former proprietors of this paper; the thing terminated as in all justice it ought to terminate and as everybody of sense expected it would.

Nevertheless Judge Zane deserves the thanks of the newspaper fraternity and of every free community for his exposition of the legitimate scope and character of journalistic criticism. His decision is in the nature of a well-timed rebuke to those thin-skinned or litigious individuals who experience no shrinking aversion to getting prominently before the public, but who have an unconquerable fear of public investigation and just censure. He elucidates the meaning of free speech and a free press as guaranteed by the Constitution, which are the surest safeguards of popular rights, and he makes clear the nice point at which the susceptibilities of a plaintiff in a case of this kind are apt to take possession of his sober judgment. For the future we imagine the owner of a tender cuticle will think twice before flying to the ineffectual balm that a frivolous suit for libel may afford against the shafts of honorable criticism. Speaking for the NEWS, we take pleasure in promising that whenever it shall be found necessary to charge official corruption, misconduct or anything of the sort, the language employed will not be ambiguous enough to need judicial interpretation; those whom we may have to antagonize in this manner will be given at least the satisfaction of feeling that only by stupidity on their own part are they in danger of being knocked out by a demurrer.

A CRYING EVIL.

The astonishing prevalence of the senseless vice of profanity has doubtless caused every thoughtful person to wish that the law might step in with penalties where Christian persuasion has failed to effect a cure. One might almost welcome with joy the re-enactment and enforcement of the rigorous "blue laws" of hallowed memory—so outrageous and shameless has the practice become; and it is with no small pleasure that one hears of the revival in England of an old statute of George III, according to which a laborer must pay a shilling for every oath uttered in public, a man above the grade of laborer must pay two, and a "gentleman" five. Recent reports go to show that these penalties are being energetically imposed, and that the choice expressions so frequently dropping from the "gentlemen's" lips are being converted into coin at a rate that is likely to make quite a material addition to the public revenues. If the effect shall also be to check the practice and extinguish it altogether, the final result will be worth all that it has cost and a great deal more.

Profanity is the national vice of America, and it is growing with a rapidity that is positively painful. Our own community, free as it was for a long time from the infection, is now most grievously afflicted. The city ordinances on the subject are a dead letter, for those who ought to enforce them are themselves violators. The busier streets can scarcely be traversed at any hour when coarse, brutal oaths do not fill the air. On some of the sunnier corners, crowds of loafers congregate and utter forth in common conversation imprecations that are shocking to the ear. Old and young vie with each other in the variety and ingenuity of their swearing, and the sacred name of Deity is hourly profaned by mouths too foul to be permitted in decent society. For the sake of civilization and Christianity, for the sake of refined womanhood and pure childhood, for the sake of the law of both God and man, a sharp lesson should be taught the wretches who thus give offense.

A HOHENZOLLERN SCHOOL-BOY.

The heir-apparent to the imperial throne of Germany and the royal throne of Prussia is an eleven-year-old lad who has just entered the public school at Kiel. There is a flavor of democracy about this proceeding that one would hardly expect from so autocratic and austere a ruler as the young crown prince's father during his short reign has shown himself to be. Yet in causing his son to participate in the daily exercises imposed upon all the children in his realm and to indulge that he mingle in childish sports and studies with those whom he expects to rule, Kaiser William has but done with his heir that which his father Frederick William did with him. The present emperor was the first of his race to seek knowledge at the common fount provided for the humblest German child. His tutor suggested that the future sovereign should not be denied the benefits of intimate contact with those who were to be his future subjects. Iron old William I opposed the innovation as subversive of precedent and in violation of all Hohenzollern notions of court procedure. But the then crown prince, progressive, amiable Frederick, and his wife, the English princess, seconded the tutor's demand, and the innovation was made.

Whether or not William II received any hints during the experience that may be useful to him on the throne, it is clear that he believes he suffered no harm, otherwise he would scarcely require that his successor pass through it. There have been few proofs lavished that he has abandoned any of the pretensions and prerogatives of royalty, or that he entertains any notion of yielding a greater measure of political power to the people than his father formerly at his needs. On the contrary, while he has evidently imbibed notions founded in loyalty, and more than one generation will pass by ere it is necessary to give it a fair chance for development. Meanwhile the new school-boy and his practical-minded sire are to be congratulated on the impetus their recent action is likely to give to one of the public schools of uninteresting and non-progressive Kiel.

THE SENATORIAL SITUATION.

One of the senatorial contests to which the eyes of the whole country have been turned for several weeks past was settled yesterday, California being the state and Stephen M. White of Los Angeles the successful man. The result was accomplished as soon as attempted, contrary to the expectations of nearly everybody that knew anything about the situation, and with no other disorder than a charge of bribery against one member of the legislature and the retort violent immediately following it. There are forty senators and eighty representatives in the California legislature and it therefore required sixty-one votes to elect on joint ballot; the Democrats had fifty-nine, the Republicans fifty-two, the Populists eight and there was one independent, who, with one of the Populists, voted for White, giving him the necessary majority and a majority of two, there being one Republican absent.

Mr. White is a Democrat of the most pronounced character and a man of great ability. He is a native Californian, we believe, and is therefore many removes from an old man. He is a lawyer by profession and is moderately wealthy. His election narrows the small gap between the Democratic and Republican strength in the United States Senate by six votes, three being taken from the majority and given to the minority, the other two coming from New York and Wisconsin. In the former Edward Murphy, Jr., has been chosen, but there has been no choice yet in the other, although it is as good as settled, the only question being as to what Democrat it will be, that party having a decided majority in the legislature.

The Senate stands up to date—Republicans forty-four, Democrats forty-three, Populists one. In this statement, Kyle of South Dakota, elected as an independent is classed with the Democrats because he has so far acted with them and has rarely in formal terms announced his intention of continuing to do so; and Stewart of Nevada is put down as a Republican although elected as a Populist, for the reason that he is a Republican of pronounced proclivities and on a vote as between the two great parties would be most likely to act with the one to which he has been attached during the whole of his political career.

The Democrats have now to elect but one more senator to be in absolute control of every branch of the government after the fourth of next March; they would then have forty-four or just half, which, with the casting vote of Vice-President Stevenson, would be sufficient for all practical purposes. However, Peffer of Kansas, the one Populist, will vote with them on all such questions as tariff reduction, as probably any other in his class who may yet be chosen would; so that, we may say, on the greatest issues before the people the administration will be strictly Democratic anyway.

A SERIOUS FIASCO.

The Irish question threatens to be the rock upon which the Gladstonian ministry in Great Britain shall again split. The premier's majority is only slender at best, and its component parts are so diverse and dissimilar upon the leading issues that are likely to come before parliament that his hold upon the office has all along seemed in the highest degree precarious. The outline of the Irish home rule bill, which after much consideration and hesitating preparation is at last informally divulged, gives small hope that it is destined to be adopted. A summary of the proposed measure shows it to possess the following features:

First—Reserving to parliament the sole right of legislation in reference to the land question for a limited time.

Second—As to the retention of Irish members at Westminster, it will probably adopt Mr. Parnell's suggestion to first settle the question of the vote to be placed upon the coal business.

Third—Appointed judges will be retained by the government for the term of ten years.

Fourth—The same term will be fixed for the complete transformation of the police into a civil force.

Fifth—Ireland will have no power to impose protective duties.

It seems almost amazing that so much time and study should have been devoted to a matter that promises no better solution of the great difficulty than this. On the one hand it will appear to many Englishmen that the bill promises a great deal to Ireland, while to many Irishmen it will come far short of that which even moderate home-rulers thought they had a right to expect. In a word, it lacks the boldness that would commend it to the advanced thinkers on either side of St. George's channel, and as a half-way, tinkering sort of measure that arouses enthusiasm in no quarters it bears evidence of having been born only to go down to early death.

THE WORLD'S AGE.

When the scientific geologist has nothing else to look after or whom, like Sandor Ingatz, he is out of a job, he seems more otherwise turns his attention to fixing up the age of the earth. Considering the fact that we are all well acquainted with the subject of speculation, by reason of some one supposing speculations, it seems at a glance as though we ought also to know something regarding the length of time since it was fashioned and set on its triumphal march about the blazing sun, but we don't; as a matter of fact worldly wisdom in this instance consists of a mass of theories interwoven with a network of conjectures, out of which a product is evolved and paraded before the intellectual public as a "conclusion," the author of which is not always as wise as the reader.

We are now advised by a savant that the amount of lime salts in water which comes as drainage from districts made up of granites and basalts is found by a comparison of different analyses to be on an average of 323 parts in 100,000 parts of water. These was adopt this mode of reckoning assume that "the exposed areas of igneous rocks, taken on an average throughout all geological time, will bear to the exposures of sedimentary rocks a ratio of one to nine, and from these and other abstruse data it is inferred that the eliminations of the calcareous matter now found in all the sedimentary strata" must have been going on for a period of 100,000,000 years! There will be a few if not a good many to whom the quoted passage will be about equivalent to so much Hamarit, since every one has not a scientific bent of mind; but most of us can gather in the conclusion and hold fast thereto with but little trouble.

It is said that even numbers are usually a just object of suspicion, and in this case they are especially so. If the philosopher, savant, or whatever else he may be had inserted a fraction somewhere amidst that long chain of cipher, or had broken up the freight-train appearance by the introduction of one or more of the other numerals, it would "go down" somewhat easier; and it would have been no harder to do this, either, since it could have been as well arranged as the existing result by the same process of thought and reasoning. For instance, he might have shown that the calcareous sediment of the siluran strata and the poecilitic systems undergo a deteriorating abrasion of 9061 corresponding with a cycle at 642 years, and this subjoined to the maxima of deterioration precipitated by the consolidation of hydrostatic and hydro-carbonic pressure exhibits a remainder of 7,091 per cent, thus making up the sum total of the earth's existence 651,294,357½ years. If any reader is disposed to doubt that our system is less scientific and methodical than the other, it is a safe guarantee that none of them will question that the result last arrived at is as correct as the preceding one; at least he (or she) will be unable to show that it isn't.

PAPERS WHICH resorted to various devices last year to make themselves conspicuous, thus increasing their circulation, have paid out or are to pay out enormous sums. The Courier-Journal has $13,400 in gold coin to distribute to election guessers as soon as the official returns from all the states are in, $10,000 going to the closest guess on the presidential figures and $100 on each of the states. The New York Herald recently distributed several hundred dollars to the best guessers as to its average daily circulation for 1891, and the Herald of that city is paying a hired girl five dollars a week for life because of her luck in guessing nearest the vote of New York state in the late election.

OUR ESTEEMED morning contemporaries woke in the matter of court reporter give consideration to the motto of Kentucky in that they are able to say "United we stand, united we tumble," insofar this morning on making the DESERET NEWS PUBLISHING COMPANY the defendant to Judge Powers' libel suit which was yesterday passed upon in the Third district court. The company they name has the present management of the News and has not yet had the good fortune to get into the courts save as a chronicler, not a manufacturer, of law suits.

A HANDSOME engraving of the Utah World's Fair building at Chicago has been received from the office of the Commission in this city. The building and its surroundings, as shown in this artistic representation of them, are such as to cause patriotic pride in every Utah citizen. The courtesy of Secretary E. A. McDaniel enables the NEWS to give its readers a reduced representation of the picture. It appears on another page.

THE ELECTION of some specimens of this year's crop of senators, and the scandals attendant upon the attempt to elect others, constitute the best kind of argument for the taking of the business from the state legislatures entirely and giving it to the people.
