AGRICULTURAL NOTES.

The following was one of the rules of practice adopted by a good farmer of the past generation:—Pay a fiddler if he is a poor hand, all you promise him; if he is a good hand, pay him a little more—it will encourage him to do still better.

DESTROYING CATERPILLARS.—A thoroughly underdrained his land, says the money thus used paid him better than if he had invested in bonds or bank, or railway stocks, as his capital is doubled every five years.

DESTROYING CATERPILLARS.—A remedy which has been used on a large scale in Southern France, consists in a dilute solution of sulphide of potassium, at the rate of about one part in five hundred. The infested plants are to be sprinkled with the decoction by means of a garden syringe, and it is said that vegetation is not the least injured by its application.

HOW TO WATER HORSES.—One writer says, never water immediately before or after feeding. I say that if a horse is thirsty, always give him drink, and he will thank you for it. I have often seen horses kept in the stable an hour for an hour or two and not eat a pound of hay or grain, but looking wistfully for water, and then their careful owner, who would not let them have water when warm, will come to give them enough to kill, and give the remainder of the day on two bucketfuls of water and no feed. Ten chances to one his horse gives out with him or gets sick before night. Now, I say, give the horse water if he is ever so warm; give him a swallow, rinse out his mouth and nostrils, give him a bite of hay, in a short time a little more water, not too much at one time, water several times, a little at a time, until he is satisfied, he will not drink more than half what he would if you let him gulp it down all at once.—Cor. N. Y. Tribune.

FEED FOR PRODUCING MILK.—The Practical Farmer says: It is well settled in the opinion of all our best dairymen that bran greatly promotes the milk secretion in cows and it is held almost universally. About equally mixed with corn meal is the usual proportion. This mixture seems to promote both quality and quantity of milk.

From several sources we hear that buckwheat bran is a great milk producer, and it is now being used considerably among our Chester county dairymen, in about the same proportions as the other.

Thomas Cawthrop, near West Grove, Chester county, also by repeated trials with his own cows, has fully satisfied himself that they do as well with corn and cob meal and bran as with pure corn meal and bran. The amount of nutriment in corn bran is so very small that this result will have to be explained on the supposition of the ground cob acting to promote digestion by distending the stomach. The presence of bulky material being necessary to promote distension and fill up the stomach of ruminating animals, before perfect digestion can be accomplished, is frequently lost sight of. Hungarian grass is also found for milch cows to be rather superior to the ordinary run of hay. The last year or two, Hungarian grass has loomed up wonderfully for the estimation of our dairy farmers, and a large scope of land will be sowed with it the coming season. It matures for cutting in about sixty days, and produces two to four tons per acre—the latter of course on good soils. Three pecks to the acre is the usual allowance of seed. Where a good hay market is convenient, this substitution of Hungarian grass for common hay in home feeding will be a clear additional source of profit.

DESTRUCTION OF THE CODLING MOTH.—It is generally conceded that the worst enemy we have to contend with in apple culture in this region is the codling moth. Our trees grow well and flower well; the fruit sets in abundantly as a healthy tree ought to set fruit; but the "worm" comes along by-and-by and ultimately nips all our hopes of fruit.

During the past few years reports have been made of the quantities of codling moths which have been caught by using yide-mouthed bottles of sweetened liquid as traps for the purpose. These hung in the trees are said to get filled with insects in the course of a single night, and among the number largely of the codling moth. On the strength of these reports we have recommended in times past attention to such a simple manner of destruction. We observe however that Missouri's devoted and enthusiastic entomologist, Prof. Riley, is satisfied that if any are caught in this way they are too few to have much influence, and besides a large number of insects which are really beneficial to the fruit-grower, he thinks are destroyed at the same time, so that the profit and loss of the account shows no gain at any rate. Mr. Riley, however, goes farther than this and shows what seems to be a much better plan. He says that there are two broods of young every year. That the first brood leave the apple before it falls generally, and in the night time crawl down the stem in order to reach the ground in order to undergo transformation. If a band of old bagging be placed around the tree, and left there for a few weeks, they go into this nest instead of the ground and may then be readily destroyed. A permanent roll of bagging can be used by having an elastic rubber band hook it fasten it to the tree. We suppose the pupa can be destroyed in these permanent bags by dipping them into a boiler of hot water.

Some do the same with straw bands and other means to cover close shingles together—the principle in all being the same namely, to furnish a hiding-place for the little "worms." This will effectually do for the first brood, and we suppose the last one, which comes down with the fallen apples, must be seen to by gathering up the fallen and worthless fruit.

There will still be the objection so often made when these remedies are proposed—what use is it for one to destroy his insects if they will only come from one's neighbors? But it has seemed to us that these arguments are little more to be regarded than in the destruction of rats or mice. But who ever hesitated to set a trap in his cellar because a mouse might come from his neighbor's in search of his trapped and departed friend? The argument, if of any worth, is in favor of missionary work. It will urge to induce our neighbors to goand do likewise. Indeed there is nothing so valuable to a whole neighborhood as a good example. Let them see that you are destroying thousands of codling moths in this way, and with hardly any trouble, and it is a rare chance if they do not follow your lead in their orchard.—Germantown Telegraph.

In an article on "Persia and the Jews," the Jewish Messenger remarks that "The Shah of Persia has conferred upon Baron Reuter the most extraordinary powers ever enjoyed by one man since the days of Mordecai the Jew, who was Prime Minister to the Persian king, and ruled over the one hundred and twenty-seven provinces of that mighty potentate. The mission of Baron Reuter is to civilize Persia, to bring her into closer and more intimate relations with other nations. He has the monopoly of railways and mines, the control of the Caspian fisheries, the direction of commercial affairs."
