FRAGMENTS.

[illegible]

U. S. MARSHAL [illegible] has been absent from the city for several days, but his whereabouts seem to be a dark secret.

[illegible]

Hot Springs vs City.

In the Third District court John W. Donnellan, receiver of the Beck's Hot Springs property, filed an injunction suit against Salt Lake City last evening, asking that the defendants be restrained against blasting a tunnel through a rock near one of the hot springs and from constructing a sewer through the same. The injunction is prayed for on the ground that if the sewer is constructed near the spring, a break may occur which will damage the former and render it useless for medicinal bathing and other purposes; further, that there is danger of diverting a portion of the water from the spring.

The city has been ordered to show cause on August 19th why a restraining order should not issue.

Little Discharged.

George Little on being tried by a jury in Commissioner Pratt's court yesterday afternoon, on the charge of having assaulted Alfred Mudge at Saltair last Sunday, was acquitted after a protracted hearing.

[SECOND LETTER.]

Special Correspondence to the DESERET NEWS.

Leaving Paragonah we came to Cedar City, thence westward across the valley about ten miles and through a hilly country about fifteen miles further to Pinto in Washington county. We were now on the old California freight road that was traveled so much twenty-five years ago before the advent of railroads. It is now little used except for local travel. We were now rapidly approaching the hot desert country about which we had heard so many startling stories and it was with a feeling akin to dread that we entered it.

Way up in Sevier valley we met a man with a covered wagon and driving a span of jaded horses. The yellow dust on his wagon cover and the huge water barrel at the side told us he was from Arizona. When we told him we were bound for the same country he [illegible] ... He then proceeded to make us acquainted with the horrors of the country through which we would have to pass, and warned us solemnly not to drive fast and never to be caught in the desert without water in the barrel, and he ran his tongue out and with an impressive gesture illustrated what the result would be. At Cove Fort we met three men just returned from Arizona. [illegible]

The night we stayed at Pinto was cool and pleasant, and when we arose at 5 a.m. to resume our journey it was so cold that we found our coats and a robe over our laps hardly sufficed to keep us warm. Our course now was along the old California road through the hilly country. About ten miles west of Pinto we passed a little valley skirted by hills of considerable elevation. There is a spring in the valley and a field of [illegible] and cattle were grazing. This is the Mountain Meadows where the massacre took place thirty-six years ago and where John D. Lee was executed. Formerly there was a monument of stone around erected to mark the spot where the dreadful deed was enacted, but we were told that it had fallen down until now there was hardly anything left of it.

Soon after leaving Mountain Meadows we crossed a ridge of considerable elevation and commenced to descend towards the tributaries of the Colorado. We had passed the rim of the basin. The aspect of the country was now changed. A new variety of trees lined the creek banks. A number of species of cactus, different from anything we had before seen, covered the barren hill sides. [illegible]

Our road, after crossing the rim, took a southwesterly direction. Our descent was quite rapid. [illegible]

THE FATHER-IN-LAW PROBLEM

The Difference Between Two Worthy Sires as Viewed by Councilman Heiss.

"The mother-in-law question is one that has been sung in verse, related in story and hawked about by peddlers of cheap wit from time immemorial for the amusement of the multitude and much to the worriment and expense of that indispensable relative—sometimes bad but more frequently good," said a gentleman to a NEWS reporter today, who listened to and watched Councilmen Heiss and Moran open their batteries on each other at the meeting of the City Council on Tuesday night over the employment of their fathers-in-law by the city.
