TRIMMING HIDES.

The Tanners Trim as Adopted by the Tanners' Hide and Leather Association.

The hide houses are crowded with country hides which the tanners refuse to take because they are not properly trimmed. Tanners, butchers and dealers ought all strive to improve the condition of hides and skins for market. With a view to assisting in this improvement it here reproduced from the Chicago Hide and Leather an illustration showing the usual form and trim of a hide taken off by country butchers, along with directions for the tanner's trim.

The "tanner's trim," as adopted by the Tanners' Hide and Leather association of the United States, is shown by the dotted lines, indicating what should be taken off, and the letters a and b show bad form in skinning. In the tanner's trim these instructions are observed:

A COUNTRY HIDE.

Take off lower jaw and upper lip behind the nostrils.
The pate between the eyes.
The horns and ears.
The cheek, when throat is cut across.
The fore legs at the knee.
The hind legs midway between knee and dew claws, or higher up when cut across.
All tags caused by unskilled skinning (the dotted lines.)
The points marked "a" should appear of "b" if properly skinned.

The parts marked to be cut off are worthless to the tanner, but have a value for glue stock, yet from distant points this value would not equal the cost of freight. Butchers will see how a large part of the trim on this hide would be avoided by care in skinning. The trim is nearly the same as has been made in New York for years. All foreign hides and some western are trimmed even closer than this.

It will increase the popularity of any regular shipper to put them in this shape, and a considerable saving of freight will be made and risk of damage avoided. The tanners are demanding it shall be done.

Some other points of importance may be mentioned here. Bothersome hides cause much loss. It is believed that this occurs in the first 24 hours after a hide is taken off. If butchers will have hides spread out in shade for that time before hanging up, it may be avoided. Scorched, grubby, fallen and badly branded hides are more and more avoided by tanners. In New York all such hides go at one third off. The western hides will soon have to conform to some rule.

Wheat For Seed.

W. C. Latta, writing from the Indiana station to Prairie Farmer, gives some advice of use wherever wheat is grown. He says: The seed should be sound, plump, heavy, and of strong vitality. To this end, the wheat from which the seed is to be obtained should be allowed to become fully ripe and should not be subject to prolonged dampness, which will cause mold in the shock and heating in the stack or bin.

The common practice of passing wheat for seed through the fanning mill is a good one, but it should be repeated if necessary with a strong blast to screen and blow out all small, light and shrunken kernels, leaving only plump seed for sowing. If necessary to treat the seed wheat for "heat" the lighter kernels may be skimmed off, which will further improve the quality of the seed. If the crop from which the seed wheat is obtained contains any "heat" or stinking smut, it should be treated after screening with "bluestone" or hot water to destroy the germs. We prefer the hot water treatment which tends to re-enforce the germinating power of the seeds, whereas the blue stone treatment tends to retard the germination and reduce the yield of the crop.

Thrashing Corn.

A Michigan farmer, reporting to The Home, Farm and Fireside, says: "Do not thrash your corn. If you run a thresher and have never thrashed corn, you would better not begin now. Three years ago there was a mania in this vicinity (Portland) among the farmers for thrashing corn, but they don't thrash any more now. The reason is that after it is thrashed it will not keep. It will heat in spite of all that can be done. I thrashed about 200 bushels for myself four years ago, and a part of it heated and spoiled. Another thing, it is very hard on a thresher, and nothing but an old machine should be used."

A Wisconsin farmer, writing on the same subject, said: "Corn can be thrashed by cutting down the concave teeth to an inch or a little less. The corn must be well dried. It is better to husk the fodder and thrash after cold weather. It will thrash out nearly as fast as small grain, and stock eat the stover better than that run through a cutter. The stover should be put under shelter, or it will spoil."

Live Stock Points.

The horse is not going. The same day the report is spread abroad that a prominent New York dry goods merchant will use horseless delivery wagons comes also the telegram that the bay mare Martha Wilkes, with a trotting record of 2.08, has been bought for the Prussian crown stables, and will be taken from her old Kentucky home to Prussia. Germany will buy American trotters for breeding stock if they are large, sound, fast and of perfect pedigree. Besides Martha Wilkes, the agent for the Prussian government is buying other unexceptionable brood mares in foal to famous trotting sires.

When you breed horses for sale, breed only the best, and you can always sell them.

A California man has patented a new wagon tongue support. Two plates are bolted to the axle, one in front, the other at the back. From the front plate proceed two long legs with holes in them. The holes hold strong wire supporting arms, which keep the tongue up.

A good wash for sore mouth in suckling pigs is made as follows: One ounce of carbolic acid and 3 ounces of glycerin put into a pint of soft water. The mixture may be injected into the pig's mouth by means of a small syringe, or even a little spring bottomed oil can, such as usually accompanies sewing machines.

Those who want to make money out of horse shoes should do all they can at it while the fad lasts. It is bound to go out of fashion, like every other fad. Every fad goes out as soon as the "common people" begin to take it up.

A man of much experience in horse exhibitions says that all veterinary examinations of horses at shows should be made outside of the ring and before the animals are brought to the public eye. All that are unsound should be ruled out. This would save much time.

Gluten meal mixed with bran is an excellent food for dairy cows. Mixed with cornmeal it is good for pigs.
