TO ENLARGE THE MILL.

Mining Company Will Now Bend Its Energies in That Direction.

THE MINE'S SHOWING JUSTIFIES IT.

Popular Prices Prevailed in the Pit—Sacrifices Believed a Dividend—Things Quiet at Stockton.

The Mining Congress over, and the speech-makers gone, the mining interests experienced quite a period of reaction. All the force is now ready for business and economy has taken the place of extravagance. It is not the matter of expense in Mining now but how cheaply it can be done. This work has been going on ever since the last, but it has been over shadowed by the excitement which has led to its backgrounding until such time as the force could spare the people a little attention to it. Now that it is over, it is time to see what it has done. It is not to be supposed that the mine will be neglected, for it is the property upon which the future of Mining rests. It is the mine that has made Mining what it is, and it is the mine that must make it what it is to be. Mine first, last and always, is the motto, so believed it is proper, so to speak, to believe it will be the place for action and will be the place for sacrifices so that in the very near future new veins and other necessary improvements, together with additional machinery, will be found in evidence on the premises of the Mineral Hill mine.

THE MINE'S OWN SHOWING.

This now is a most opportune time for such improvements, as it very evident from the fact that the Mineral Hill is showing daily, now developments occasionally leading to increase rather than decrease in the ore bodies, and the amount of pay ore in the face of the mine has been quite satisfactory of late. Ever since the last report was made, the mine has been producing ore, and the output has been quite satisfactory, considering the fact that the mine is now entering a period of development, and that the surface, as a general thing, of timber ore, which, on being reached, gave rather doubts that there would be much more pay ore in the mine. Since the last report, however, the Mineral Hill