Free Silver Coinage, Etc.

HONOLULU, HAWAII,
July 1, 1895.

Editor Deseret News.

By your kind permission I will pass upon the above subject a little further.

If the government should adopt a free and unlimited coinage of silver as a settled policy, then into change of the coin and bear certificates for it, the case of it lost in the course of time become a great bureau to the American people, not only from the expense of coining, but also for constructing buildings for storing such vast amounts of coin, and for storing and guarding of it.

The government cannot use it, is not compensated for its coinage and care, and the metal will be as useless as it was in its native bed, a loss to the country. Yes, it is a partial security for the certificates, but it paper money is wanted it could be issued on the government and secured by mortgage on real estate, state bonds or of government bonds as national bank notes are now secured and at its full face value. If this money was properly issued the government would get a revenue for it, and while no risk or burden as would be the case in coining and storing up the coin. If a law should be enacted for free coinage, silver bullion may rise in value, as some believe, or with a new values spring up and a new era be worked, who shall say that silver may not become as valuable in America as it was in Jerusalem in the days of Solomon. "And the king made silver to be in Jerusalem as stones." "For it (silver) was nothing accounted of in the days of Solomon." Then, silver was so unstorable and abundant Solomon would not have even his drinking vessels made of it.

Silver depreciated in value during the life of the Sherman silver law, notwithstanding fifty-four million dollars was yearly coined under it. The coining and storing it in vaults may for a time increase its value, but it must eventually confuse its down grade, as the storing such great bulks at most accumulate under a free and unlimited coinage law, in a decade or so must act as a message to the silver market of the world, as, like the Johnstown reservoir, its contents must continue to increase and the barrier that holds it in place to weaken more and more, and burst it must, sooner or later and precipitate its contents upon the silver market of the world. This being always feared, will act as a wet blanket to any rise in the price of silver.

The throwing upon the market 29,375 tons of silver bullion by Germany in 1871-2 and other causes at work about that time, knocked the bottom out of the silver market, and it has been on the down grade ever since. Notwithstanding the United States coined 378 million dollars during the time and the world at large very much more.

The 29,375 tons of silver thrown upon the market by Germany, was only a small washout, in comparison to the great flood that will be precipitated upon the market upon the bursting of our silver reservoir, after a few decades of storing under a free and unlimited coinage act in the United States. A large amount of silver, colored and uncolored, is already on hand. There appears to be more silver produced than is wanted for use as money, which is one reason why it should not be coined. The justice of a law may be questioned that requires silver to be coined and cased for at public expense, seeing nothing will be produced by it but private money and millionaires.

If it is right for the government to make every sixty cents worth of silver into a legal tender dollar for private gain, it would be also right for the government to make every bushel of wheat worth one dollar although now worth only sixty cents.

Perhaps I have said enough upon this other view of the subject under consideration, but I will add that the free and unlimited coinage of silver, the further issue of national bank notes or any other addition to private money will never settle the money question.

The people have been forced to use exclusively private money since the first formation of our government, and in consequence have been cursed with money flurries or money panics, on an average of about ten years during that whole period, and the logical conclusion is, if there is no change for the better in our monetary system, there will be no improvement during the next hundred years—a thing much to be regretted.

I will further add: The money question never can be settled until private money is supplemented by public money. In my next I will endeavor to show the difference between them.

AN AVENUE OF IDOLS.

A Double Row of Japanese Buddhas Which Cannot Be Counted.

Close to this interesting pool is the avenue of images, representing the Arabia Buddhas. The other way is clear for an equal distance. There are several hundred of these altogether, and they do bring one mother to the knees. We asked the little Jap who brought us to the place how many Buddhas there were. In our best English he replied, "Ninety books." That is [illegible] I am hear impossible. It was to count them. Each image was made almighty by having millions of little bits of paper stuck on it in and around lots of paper which had been spat at it. The object of this designation we failed to discover, though our friend Rogers informed us they were put on by the young priests, a part of whose business it was to attempt to count the Buddhas.

"And the king made something white with their idols, for as one has ever been able to count them, so the same cannot, in spite of sticking a piece of paper to his back one off. Of course two unsophisticated Englishmen were not to be hoodwinked by native stories, so Dr. Ivy (having engaged and L. (sticking the whole thing [illegible] to count the monstrous images. We started in co-operative lines each taking a side of the avenue. One of us, however, were troubled, for we had not numbered off more than a score when Rabbie M. (who we were not to part as they had once been shanted across to us: "I say, I say one of them is just side moving. I saw one Idol. They're uncanny. Let's give it up." This large region of water agreed with my conclusion, but we were some on the moving image, which turned out to be nothing more than one of the old Presidents. Noted quietly among the statues and looking as his white to-day for all the world like a gigh for old Buddha—
