THE CITY'S VICTORY.

The contract secured by the city for its electric lighting business is a decided victory for the municipality. From the first, the question raised was handled in excellent shape by the committee on improvements, which was well backed by the majority of the Council. The old rate of street lighting was $9.50 per month per lamp on a moonlight schedule. This was generally conceded to be a fair proposition. The Ogden and Salt Lake Gas and Electric Light company, which had been furnishing street lights at that figure, announced that it could not afford to do so any longer, and wanted a raise to $10.50. The City Council said it could not pay more than $9.50, and the people endorsed this position. Then the electric light company turned off the lights, and for some weeks the city has been in darkness. Now the Council has agreed to let the lighting contract to the Big Cottonwood company for two years at the $9.50 price, and receives public approval.

The only step necessary now to secure the turning on of the lights is the endorsement of the Mayor to the Council's action, and it is anticipated that this will not be long delayed. The citizens want the street lights, and now that they can be turned on at a fair price to the municipality, the quicker it is done the better. There is a change in the party which is to furnish the light. The Salt Lake and Ogden company would have received the award quickly at the figure now agreed on, but it did not feel that it could reach the price. The city should not deal less promptly with the Big Cottonwood company than it would have done with the other.

There was some talk and a report in the Council last night about an $8 contract for a year, but as there was no such bid made, the Council had no proposition of that kind to deal with. The offer of $9.25 for three years might have been more satisfactory to the city in the end than the two-year contract, but the majority of the Council did not care to enter into a long agreement. The two-year contract is a short one, but if the Council is disposed to act in that direction, there will be plenty of time to deal with the proposition of a municipal electric light plant. If such a move were decided on it would take that time, under existing financial conditions, to get the plant in operation. In the meantime the city must have light when it can get it at a price it can afford to pay.

THE BANKRUPTCY BILL.

We would commend to our readers the letter of W. S. McCornick, and the interviews with prominent business men, in yesterday's News, on the bankruptcy bill which passed the United States House of Representatives last Saturday and now goes to the Senate, and we join in urging the Utah Senators to do their utmost to defeat the bill. Reasons for antagonizing it are set forth as clearly in Mr. McCornick's letter that it is unnecessary to repeat them. It is sufficient to know that the enactment of such a law would be a serious blow to business here, in ruining that credit which is a necessary element of commercial operations and success in a new and developing section of country. When it is said that it purpose to make an equal division of returns with the eastern wholesalers and to place an equal load upon all the burdens of taxation and license, which the eastern states impose, it is sufficient ground to characterize the bill as vicious. As a matter of self-defense, Utah must oppose it.

Already the eastern wholesalers have an undue advantage in the local field, not only in the injury of the local dealer who pays the share of taxes and licenses, but in the expenses of State, county and municipal revenues. It has been proposed many times that a tax should be placed on commercial drummers, but this has been kept off on questions of constitutionality, etc. These questions no longer stand in the way (if they ever really did), and now is a good time to inaugurate a movement for equalizing the business of these drummers to pay its proportion of revenues. The constitutionality of a tax on this drummer business has been fought to a finish and, a few days ago, in a Colorado district, reached the definite result that such tax is constitutional.

There is no desire to drive eastern wholesalers out of the Utah market. All that is wanted is to place them on an equal footing with the home merchant in the same class. This is done to some extent in the present law allowing local creditors to be placed on the preferred list, but it is not complete. The eastern wholesalers are now urging the bankruptcy bill, to sweep away that which gave local creditors a fair opportunity with them. The measure and the motive underlying it should be antagonized even to the extent of carrying the war into what hitherto has been a neutral state in the present agitation.

REVIVAL OF INDUSTRY.

Apropos of the stirring this week of the railway west from this city is the suggestion from Bradstreets that there seems to be every prospect that the year 1896 will be marked by a tangible increase in the amount of railroad construction to be added to the existing mileage of the United States. For the last two years the effect of heavy losses upon this branch of industry was very marked; in 1893 less than 1,800 miles of new track was built, and in 1894 the amount was only 1,555 miles; in 1895 the aggregate footed up only 2,656 miles, against over 4,000 miles in 1892 and 1893, respectively. There has been a steady decrease since 1887, when 12,724 miles of new track was built.

Discussing this branch of the general outlook of the country, the Railway Age says this decrease does not mean that the demand for railways is nearly supplied and that construction will continue to decrease, for there is room and will be need for far greater than the entire present mileage of the country. If we had as many miles as Great Britain in our ratio of railway mileage to square miles of territory, instead of 161,000 we would have a total of nearly 500,000 miles; if all the country were as well supplied as Illinois we would have 522,000 miles, and if Massachusetts were taken as the basis there would be 772,000 miles of lines.

The Age makes a list of roads upon which construction has been commenced or which give promise of early commencement. There are between 30,000 and 40,000 miles uncompleted or projected, and of 208 lines lying in 42 states and territories there is prospect of building this year 10,145 miles. This is pretty well distributed over the entire country, Utah being assigned 55 miles, Nevada 50, Idaho 65, and Arizona 85. It will be seen that even this list does not include all that is in prospect in Utah before this year closes.

It is argued, and with good reason, that this revival in the railroad building industry indicates a great relief from the pressure of hard times which have prevailed. With the revival in that line there must be a parallel advance in other branches, and the attention of Utah is such as to give every assurance that she will be in the front rank of the prosperity attending these encouraging developments.

THE NEW SHAH.

Advices from Persia are meager considering the commotion undoubtedly caused in that country as a result of the assassination of the shah and the subsequent rivalry between different claimants to the throne, nearly always following the death of an oriental ruler. It seems, however, that the succession is peacefully settled by the second son of the late shah being established on his throne and the confirmation of the eldest son as governor of one of the provinces.

Of the new shah very little is known beyond the fact that he is said to possess many good traits of character. As governor of the province of Azerbaijan, he is said to have shown administrative ability and a humane disposition. He is also credited with being predisposed in favor of Russia. This, if true, is most important, since it would give the czar's government great influence in the affairs also of the Asiatic empire. Russia with a protectorate over China and virtually over Turkey, and with Persia supporting her policy, would control nearly all Asia and move within her reach the possibility of becoming the most formidable power on earth.

INGERSOLL IS PURGATORY.

A fantastic idea has occurred to a Brooklyn artist, Mr. Perchen. He has nearly completed a painting representing the place of torment as depicted in the imagination of the people of the middle ages. He has painted it as a vast chasm surrounded by mountains, between the peaks of which stretches a pole sky in comfort in the fiery depths below. Then there are angels armed with bows, whose duty is to drive back the souls to torment the way endeavor to fly from the boiling and seething deep. A sinner pierced by an arrow and writhing back into the good regions is the inevitable fate of those who attempt to escape. All over the picture are demons with pitchforks, delighted to the work of their comparatives brows.

So far the idea is one and be the inevitable ignorance to which the antiquated idea of a future state is due is right. But the artist has endeavored to give his work a realistic air by introducing in it modern figures. He has placed in Hell the people who he has to pass as models in this country. The result is that there are over a society belle, a women of the street, a typical clubman and others. There is also one figure said to represent James J. Corbett stalking his foe in simply space, and the picture will be finished with the introduction of Corbett himself standing at the entrance of the infernal region and surveying the scene of horror. The painting is valued at $25,000, and it is said to be the intention of the artist to exhibit it in various places of the country.

The picture possibly is a great piece of art and as such may attract attention, but the entire subject can hardly fail to strike one who reflects on it, as ridiculous to the highest degree. It is in line with a curious we have seen somewhere, illustrating the alleged idea of the heaven of the earliest Anglo-Saxons as a place where an unlimited quantity of beer was consumed. The effort at treating grave subjects in this manner is never commendable. It can do no good, but is certain to do harm. In the minds of some it will shake the foundations for belief in those principles which remain eternally true, notwithstanding all errors that may have been gathered round them in the course of ages.

ILLNESS OF THE IZARGOWITZ.

Concerning the real cause of the sickness of the czarowitz, which is feared will end fatally, various rumors have been in circulation. The brother of the czar is at present in Italy with his mother, and an Italian paper offers the latest explanation, which if true, disposes of previous surmises.

The late Emperor Alexander was a great athlete, and he encouraged his sons to engage in manly exercises. The elder son, the present emperor, never indulged much in this kind of play, but Prince George took after his father in this matter, and he and one of the princes of Greece often had a friendly contest. One day, the paper referred to says, the two princes wrestled in the presence of the czar. They rolled over one another in wild succession for a long while. Finally the Greek prince gave his Russian friend so violent a hit that he fell, dragging his antagonist with him. George struggled to disentangle himself from the iron embrace, and the other put his knee against his chest with the result that a stream of blood filled the mouth of the fallen wrestler. A blood vessel had been bursted, and from that day, it is said, the prince has never been well.

It will be remembered that the Greek once saved the present czar from death, when in Tokio a murderous blow was directed against him by a Japanese soldier. Has the same prince who saved a czar for Russia accidentally deprived it of a czarowitz and perhaps of the much talked of glory of the intended succession festivities? If so, he would twice have exercised an influence upon the destiny of one of the greatest countries on earth.

LOGAN, May 2, 1896.

To the Editor:

Would you kindly inform me through the News if senate bill No. 15, amending the irrigation laws, became law, and if so, when it goes into effect? And oblige.

Yours respectfully,

H. NILSSON,

Secretary L. & R. Irrig. District.

The above named bill, which is complementary of Territorial laws relative to irrigation companies, passed and was approved March 19. It goes into effect June 5.

The gas company has withdrawn its minimum rate of $1.57 and asks the Council to fix a minimum. This evinces a desire to be fair; the request should be granted, and a minimum, say about half that formerly fixed by the company, would be looked upon as about right, considering the expense of collecting small bills.

THE DISCUSSION in the U. S. senate indicates an acrimonious feeling that it is just possible is an indicator of something of a more serious nature soon to come.
