SERICULTURE.—CHAPTER 4.

FIRST STAGE AFTER HATCHING.

Rearing and Feeding.—Count Dandolo, in giving in his prescript, as to the successful rearing of the silkworm to the cocoon, says: "I must suppose that the silkworms are kept until the first moulting at 75 of a temperature, between 73 and 75 until the second moulting, between 71 and 73 until the third, and lastly, between 68 and 71 until the fourth moulting. One of the foundations of the art of rearing the silkworm is to know the various degrees of heat in which the silkworm should live; if this precept be not enforced, nothing can be performed with exactness. It is asserted in Mr. Roscoe's Course of Agriculture, that it is not relative to heat suitable to the condition of these industrious insects. It cannot be said that silkworms are injured by any degree of heat in this climate, however considerable it may be. But a sudden change from moderate to violent heat or the reverse is injurious. On feeding, Mr. Copstock says: Though we have not much faith in arbitrary mathematical rules, yet as they may be of some probable use to the culturist in ascertaining the amount of food for his family of worms, we give them in such extracts from the manual published by authority of Congress, in 1828. In doing this we shall give the prescribed amount on each consecutive day of their life, with regard to the day of their respective ages.

It is stated by Dr. Lardner that it takes hurdles of 3 square feet of space in the first age of the worms hatched from one ounce of eggs, and in the second age 18 square feet, third age 35 square feet, the fourth age 83 square feet, and in the fifth or last age 184 square feet, having four moultings which occur. Having completed their growth in about 33 days prior to spinning, the hurdles should be numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, etc., and each day's hatching kept separate, and fed as follows: 1st day at intervals of two hours apart, three-quarters of a pound of chopped leaves cut very fine and sprinkled on the new hatched worms which are 1-12th of an inch long. Give them plenty of room, feed them regular four times a day, says Count Dandolo. If you wish to have strong and healthy worms, second day give one pound and a quarter of chipped leaves, feed them at four different intervals, dividing the time equally, and giving the smallest quantity at the first feeding, and so increase gradually. Third day give four meals, consisting of three and one-fourth pounds, cut fine as before named, they will now begin to turn a sort of hazel color and the bristly appearance of varnish. When viewed through a convex lens their surface looks shining something like mother-of-pearl transparency. Fourth day, as the worm approaches moulting, a diminution of appetite occurs, let the first meal be about three-fourths of a pound, and one pound four ounces divided at the other meals, giving them plenty of room whilst moulting so as to avoid their sleeping in a crowded state, by gently separating and spreading them some At the beginning of this day the first appearance of change is indicated, the worms begin to shake their heads and thus express uneasiness at the increasing tension of their skin, some scarcely eating any and keep their heads in an elevated position, their bodies appear transparent, those nearer the moulting time, when seen against the light, are of a livid yellow tinge, but the greater number at the close of the day, appear torpid and cease to eat.

Fifth day the young leaves chopped as before, about half a pound should be scattered thinly over them, at four, and several times towards the end of the day, as a general thing the worms are torpid, and begin even to revive. After this moulting they are of an ash color and should be cleansed from their debris, so as to keep them healthy and strong after they have all recovered.

P. S.—Be sure to use the young leaves only in this stage.

Correspondence.

Frost and Fence.

ST. JOHN'S, May 16, 1878.

Editors Deseret News:

In your issue of April 24th, our friend B. F. Johnson, in reply to mine of March 31, has inadvertently or otherwise, made a slight mistake in quoting my statement. I said there was yet plenty of fencing material in this valley instead of 'in the mountains.' I was writing of this valley, and did not venture as far as the mountains, much less to Spring Lake Villa, from whence my answer came. And again, I do not consider myself to be building pyramids of wealth in stock; that is not my intention nor to compel my "friend" or friends to do so. I myself have but two head of stock, and one of them is a small calf. My opinion is still in favor of fence, and so are the majority of the farmers of this place. I do not wish to be thought selfish or close, as I am sure I do not intend to be. I think I am justified in withholding my cognomen, and hope there will be no hard feelings from that source.

Crops generally look well here, although the hares, commonly called rabbits, are pretty bad at present. Our peach crop, what little we had, has been entirely destroyed by frost, and the plum and apple crop in part. We have had a severe snow storm for a few hours to-day, which may result in the destruction of the remainder.

Yours,
AN AGRICULTURIST.
