A Lawyer's Vigil.

HOW HE WORKED ALL NIGHT PREPARING A CASE.

The New Orleans Times tells the following good story: Among the stirring recollections of the history of our bench and bar during the past twenty-five years, there has been unearthed one touching two high legal luminaries who, a quarter of a century ago, were the first at our bar, but who are now, alas, gone the way of all earth.

The other characters in the story were a certain district judge and a certain district attorney, and the occasion was the trial of a very important case in which the district attorney represented the government, being sued for claims amounting to many thousand dollars. The case was hard for trial by jury; on the appointed day and at the appointed hour, the judge was on the bench, the jurymen were in their places, but the district attorney came not.

An hour—two hours passed—and the patience of court and jury was well nigh exhausted. Messengers had been dispatched in all directions for the laggard, but he could nowhere be found, when lo! as the court was about to adjourn in despair the governmental representative appeared on the scene, blowing like a porpoise. The court, in ruffled temper, demanded why the wheels of justice had thus been ruthlessly stopped—in short, why he had not this distinguished gentleman come at the appointed hour, and did he choose to treat the court with disrespect?

To this the gentleman offered profuse apologies, disavowing any disrespect of the court, and offered in extenuation that, having been engaged the whole night long in preparing for this case, his labors had prostrated him, and the slight rest he sought after his task was done became prolonged slumber, from which he had just awakened.

His honor looked daggers, but used none—rather expressing himself satisfied with the explanation—and then without delay the case was ordered to proceed, and proceed it did vigorously to a termination, marked by an elaborate and exhaustive argument at the hands of the District Attorney, and a verdict in his favor after only a short deliberation.

After adjournment of court, the foreman of the jury dined with the Judge, when quite naturally there came up the subject of the recent suit, and the foreman dwelt at length in terms of ardent praise on the faithfulness, sacrifice and devotion to the interests of his office of the District Attorney, instancing his labors of the night before as an evidence of "what sort of a man he was."

The Judge smiled at his friend's remarks. "Why do you laugh?" said the other. "Because the story is enough to make a horse laugh. That stuff he told about laboring all night was a confounded lie. I know it, for (now this is the secret) I was with him myself last night, and we played poker from early dark until long after daylight this morning, and that was the way he prepared himself for the great case."

The Derby Day.

Derby day, in England, yesterday. The road to Epsom was jammed full as usual. The downs were covered with the cocoa-nut throwers, side-shows, monte-throwers, ring tossers, and all that ilk, and the race-course filled with sharpers as dangerous, though less dirty. The sky is always clear on Derby day, and the sunshine very warm. The stands are not full yet, everybody is cracking champagne and attacking the pasties in the baskets. Finally the metallic bell rings sharp and clear, and every hammer ceases, and every head is turned toward the course, from 50 to 100 miles round, while the little speck in the distance becomes a white chalk steeple of the villages beneath. How quickly the hands fill after the first bell, and what banks of loveliness are the more admirable ones—her after the of varied color, and beautiful face.

There comes the preliminary gallop down the home stretch. Fifteen to thirty of the fastest running horses of the world, nostrils distended, flanks heaved, skins glossy as satin, heads bent down in vain efforts to draw the gaudy-colored jockeys over their ears. Slowly they all canter up to the rise on the far off corner, and field-glasses are leveled by the thousands to see the start. Down goes the flag and they're off, stringing out each rod as some young colt, that carries his owner's fortune and his honor, drops to the rear, killed by the cruel pace. Ah! here is the rise of the Tottenham hill, and now we shall see where the blood and the bone lie. How smoothly and easily Gang Forward moves his ground, breating the rise with a playful toss of his lean thin head, and a wider stretch of the lengthening stride. That running strain out of White King does him good service on the hard ground of to-day—if the turf were muddy, those big shoulders of Kalefe would leave him no chance. Closest Gang Forward's flank comes the wild-looking head of Doncaster, savagely sawing his bit in an impotent effort to get away from the iron arms of Jemmy Wilmer—the best jockey between the four seas. If it were not for the temper of Doncaster he might win the race, but even Jemmy's iron muscle cannot keep him from fretting away half his strength on the first quarter.

Now comes the wild dash of the run in, and the slender limbs of Gang Forward twinkle in the sunlight like the gleams of flying thought. There's not an earthly chance of catching him. Isn't there, though? Jemmy Wilmer sets his teeth, throws up his head, and Doncaster immediately runs away with him. Then is seen what those vast shoulders and that mighty stride can accomplish on a down slope. How the voice of the people rises like the roar of a mighty sea as his brown head steals slowly up to the shoulder of Gang Forward, and stays there! How the deafening thunder of applause rises in the octave of alarm as the yearly dog rushes across the course almost under the flying feet; and how it swells back again into one vast, reverberating roar, as a last touch of Jemmy's spur sends Doncaster over the line a half length ahead, and lands him the winner of the quickest and closest Derby since Pretender beat Pero Gomez in the dazzling race of '53.—Cincinnati Times, May 23d.

Tobacco from Japan and Sumatra now appears in the London market. The "weed" from the former place is cut as fine as thread silk—a result which is said to be achieved entirely by hand. The Sumatra tobacco is of silky texture, and in color a light brown. It is used for the manufacture of cigars. Chinese tobacco is already largely imported. It is not unlike Turkish of appearance, but it is almost void in flavor.

At a recent meeting of the Birmingham (England) Council, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, chairman, moved the following memorial:—"We, the mayor of the borough of Birmingham, in public meeting assembled, resolving that the cost of reception of Prince Arthur should have been defrayed out of the public purse, and anticipating that the same will be made in the town council to invite the Prince of Wales to Birmingham, call on you to request such measures be taken that public money shall not be used outing of the public purse." After some discussion the motion was adopted by a considerable majority.
