First Presidency.

A FREE BALLOT WANTED.

What every patriotic citizen of the United States should desire this year in preference to almost any other political consideration, is the free and untrammeled vote of the American people. Neither the press nor the politicians are able to befog or disguise the issues which squarely confront the great parties in the nation. For once in our history, no particular attempt has been made as yet in this campaign to evade or deny the main propositions on which the respective candidates for the presidency stand before the country. Of course there is the usual distortion as to results and as to the intentions of the candidates; but on the whole it is conceded by both managers and followers that Mr. McKinley's success means the victory of the gold forces in the nation, while Mr. Bryan's success means the triumph of the bimetallic cause and the complete restoration of silver so far as the same can be accomplished by the man at the head of the nation's administrative affairs.

The issue being thus well-defined, it ought to be desired on all sides that a free vote of the whole people be recorded on the question. If majorities should rule, every patriot ought to desire the removal of all coercion that would interfere with the ascertaining of the real desires of the majority. Each side appears sanguine that it possesses an abundant majority; then why not leave it to the people, without any threats or interference beyond the use of legitimate persuasion or argument?

Unfortunately there is plenty of evidence that on neither side is there any intention of settling the matter in so simple and decisive a manner. Large corporations both east and west are quite as bold as ever in the attempt to influence the vote of their employes. They do not exactly buttonhole the individual voter and tell him what ticket he must support, but their methods are just as effective when they say that in their judgment the success of a certain ticket is necessary to the welfare of their business, and that every employe is expected to look at the matter as they do, on pain of being discharged personally or thrown out of work by the shutting down of the business. Naturally this affects the voter in a most vulnerable point; and while it may not come within the prohibited degree of intimidation, it is nevertheless subversive to a great extent of the free voice of the people on the questions at stake.

The people, however, are becoming restive and impatient of bosses—whether political or industrial—when the latter assume to exert over them anything more than the proper degree of control. Many Democrats in the East this year will vote for Republicans; many Republicans in the West will vote for Democrats—and in this way will the dominion of the party bosses be desperately wounded. The unrest among the masses is such that they will be reluctant to yield to the temporary but hitherto invincible influence of campaign money—and thus will the power of the capitalistic as well as the industrial bosses be shattered. We believe that many thousands will vote out of despair for a cause which even if successful will only bring them disappointment, and that many thousands more will vote for a mistaken remedy. But if all of them vote as their own inclinations and preferences suggest, the true remedy will be more quickly reached and the sad disappointment more speedily recovered from.

The need of the hour, both by way of comfort to American patriots of every section and station, and to the world as fresh evidence of the independence and stability of a government of, by and for the people, is that the country be closed with an absolutely free and unrestrained poll of the nation on the great question at issue. The administration should be the first to remove every threat of coercion from its large office-holding family. Silver mine owners or silver newspapers should follow the same course. Railroads controlled by Wall street, as well as those run in the mining interest; factories on the eastern coast as well as in the mountains; extensive employers of labor in the valleys, on the plains, in the coal mines, on the farms, in the great centers of population and commerce, on the lakes, rivers and high seas,—all ought to desire that the result this year should truly represent the popular will. The masses themselves have a right to speak, and they should speak. They have a right to ask, and we hope they will ask, that so far as relates to attempts to intimidate, threaten, coerce or improperly influence their ballots, the best and worthiest elements of all the parties unite in the command to the would-be bosses, "Hands off!"

A EUROPEAN POINT OF VIEW.

The development of the United States is followed with the keenest interest in the Old World, and the subject invariably causes profound reflections in the minds of statesmen and leading men generally. Not long ago the Hamburger Nachrichten, Prince Bismarck's paper, in a leading editorial called attention to the supposed danger threatening Europe from a united America, and suggested a united Europe as the only shield against pan-Americanism. The article contains thoughts and suggestions particularly interesting because reflecting, probably, the views of Germany's greatest statesman, or of those more intimately acquainted with his political creed.

The danger mentioned, the Nachrichten says, should be pointed out now, when there is every probability that a party unfriendly to Europe will assume control in the coming Presidential election. For years, the paper continues, the development of the idea of unity in America has caused irreparable damage to declining Europe. It looks as if it were the destiny of Europe to lose its life-power after having fulfilled its mission, just as some organisms in nature die after fecundation. Barely a century ago Europe created the United States in a desert, and this country has already destroyed the traditional order of things. America first made the necessaries of life an international article of trade, whereby the cost of living in Europe was reduced, but at the same time the value of farming land was depressed and the agrarian movement as a matter of necessity started; the silver production of the United States has reached such proportions as to disturb the financial systems of the world.

The German paper then gives a brief sketch of the influence of the United States on the industries of the Old world. European export, it says, has decreased in proportion to the increase of American export. The continent at one time found in England a profitable market for nearly all raw material, but in 1875 or thereabouts American competition appeared with so much success that in 1880 the greatest part of the food products imported to Great Britain came from the United States; from this moment the European continent had lost its best market. India, Australia and Russia also rose to prominence, and prices fell; Europe was flooded with food products. A policy of protection was the natural result.

It is further pointed out that Europe before long must lose Central and South America as markets for European products, and that the United States naturally will absorb that part of the globe. But a war with Europe is thought to be inevitable first. Bismarck's paper says:

He who speaks thus (referring to the Monroe doctrine) must feel that he has power to take up arms against the great powers of Europe. Whether the United States can do this may be doubted; for such a war would not be decided with fleets of Alabama cruisers, and the dollar, now threatening a revolution in Spain, is not almighty. The United States in a war with Europe would have enough to do to cover its coasts, and since the West Indian Archipelago, the Mexican gulf and the Panama isthmus would be in the hands of the enemies, these would be strategically in the most favored position. This is also the main reason why Americans support the rebellion in Cuba and desire to purchase the Danish Antilles.

The European discord, it is further argued, cannot be permanent. A time will come when Europe will unite in an effort to prevent the United States from taking possession of Central and South American markets. When England assisted Spanish and Portugese colonies to overthrow the Spanish system of prohibition, it was done in order to secure the English trade in these countries; and if a contest for extended trade again should come, the European powers would not remain passive spectators. Only a united Europe can grapple with the threatening danger.

The views here reflected are spreading on the other side. Stated in a few words they are simply this, that if the markets of the world are not thought to be sufficient for the necessities of all the nations, a war of extermination will be resorted to, and the weakest will perish. It is the rule that has ever obtained among barbarians, and the one that governs the highway robber and assassin. But for all that, the United States can do no better than take the situation as it is and be prepared for what may come. And the best preparation would seem to be the establishment of American independence in all matters relating to internal and external questions, fortified by unity and righteousness. United America means a good deal more than united Europe, for the latter would be at best a compact between the masters of slaves. Besides, Europe may before long have problems to solve more serious than those pointed out in the article of the Nachrichten.

IMPORTANT AS TO SCHOOL LANDS.

A friend who is interested in land matters from the standpoint of those who have acquired rights in equity, if not in fact, to the possession of a small slice of the world's surface—a gentleman, in other words, who has always been on the side of the legitimate land-owner as against the land shark—invites our attention to a matter which is of great interest to occupants of school sections in this State. The information is given forth from the office of the board of land commissioners and has probably been already published, though if so it has escaped the notice of many who are directly interested; at any rate it is important enough to deserve all the further publicity that can be given.

It is to the following effect: Occupants of school lands prior to January 1st, 1894, are to have the preference right to purchase said lands at the appraised valuation. Occupants of school lands before the government surveys were extended over them, or who hold successive title (that is, "squatter's" title from such occupants) shall have the right to purchase said lands at one-fourth the appraised valuation, provided said one-fourth of appraisement does not fall below $1.25 per acre. Applications for purchase and title must be made by occupants of the lands by the 20th of December, 1896.

POOR ARMENIA.

A dispatch states that undoubtedly the Armenian question will be discussed when the czar arrives in England. The sentiment there is so strong now against the policy that keeps the Turk in power, that it is supposed the Russian ruler will hardly be able to resist the pressure that is to be brought to bear upon him regarding that matter. The public opinion in England is certainly changed. Lord Chatham once declared that he would not discuss the subject with anyone who could not perceive that the existence of Turkey was a question of life and death to England. The present premier admits that if Turkey is unable or unwilling to carry out reforms and prove its right to existence, there is no reason why the powers should, by artificial means, keep it as a permanent menace to peace. This fairly represents the change public opinion in Great Britain has undergone.

It is time to have that question settled. Dr. J. Lepsius publishes in the Reichsbote an estimate of the number of victims lately sacrificed on the altar of Turkish intolerance. He says about 88,000 people were slain, 2,500 villages, 568 monasteries and churches destroyed and about 500,000 persons reduced to starvation. And the cruelties perpetrated are too appalling to be repeated. It is but too evident that the sultan, secured by Russian protection, believes that he can wipe the Armenian nation from the face of the earth, and that the program is being carried out daily by the "deportation" of unfortunates, which simply means that they are being drowned in the waves of the Black Sea, or elsewhere. Can this be done in broad daylight and under the pretext that none must interfere because Europe's peace thereby would be threatened? If human hearts are beating in breasts of monarchs and rulers as in those of common mortals, they will certainly some day, or some night, awaken to their terrible responsibility, and call a halt to the shedding of blood by the shores of the Bosphorus. But if they do not—if history is to be relied on—the consequences of that neglect will fall with terrible force on their own dynasties and countries. Justice, infinite, is sometimes slow, but always sure.

Reliable Electric Work.

Mrs. S. A. Kerr, of Pomona, Cal., had the bad luck to sprain her ankle. "I tried several liniments," she says, "but was not cured until I used Chamberlain's Pain Balm. That remedy cured me and I take pleasure in recommending it and testifying to its efficacy." This medicine is also of great value for rheumatism, lame back, pains in the chest, pleurisy and all deep-seated and muscular pains. For sale by druggists.

Last August while working in the harvest field I became overheated, was suddenly attacked with cramps and was nearly dead. Mr. Cummings, the druggist, gave me a dose of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy which completely relieved me. I now keep a bottle of the remedy handy. A. M. BUNNELL, Centerville, Wash. For sale by druggists.

Mrs. E. E. Davis, of San Miguel, Cal., says: "I am trying to a measure to repay the manufacturers of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for the great good their remedy has done me. For years I was a constant sufferer from weak lungs and bronchial asthma. My rest at night was disturbed by a hacking cough, so that I felt miserable the greater part of the time. Many remedies recommended by friends were tried, none of which proved suitable to my case. I did not experience any beneficial results until I began taking Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. After two bottles of the large size have been used I am pleased to state, my health is better than it has been for years. The soreness has left my lungs and chest and I can breathe easily. It has done me so much good that I want all who are suffering from lung troubles, as I was to give it a trial." For sale by druggists.
