ATTENDANCE AT MEETINGS.

The discipline of the Church of Christ is given in the revelations of the Lord through the channels of communication which He has established; and in carrying out that discipline the Latter-day Saints frequently have elicited admiration because of the perfectness of their Church organization. Such perfection is, of course, manifest only through the life and spirit which actuate the working body; and where these are inactive the most perfect plan of organization must be ineffectual for good, since its value lies in the manner of its practical application.

In a notable way the Latter-day Saints give evidence of the vigor they possess by their attendance at Sacrament and other meetings, both for the Church generally and for the various quorums and divisions. Where the members attend the meetings they are strengthened and built up in their faith; they are placed in possession of a greater power ...
