FORMER SCARES OF SMALLPOX.

Dr. W. F. Anderson Interviewed by a Reporter for the "News."

GIVES INTERESTING DATA.

Tells of Former Scares, of the Vaccination Craze, and of the Danger from Smallpox.

Dr. W. F. Anderson, one of the oldest and best known physicians of this city, was interviewed by a reporter for the "News" today, and gave some interesting information concerning two former years of smallpox in this city, and of the treatment of those who had the disease. He said:

About the year 1881 or 82, or when Gen. Taylor was acting as mayor, I was summoned to see a man at the old Tabernacle hotel, being called in by Dr. Clinton. The case was very similar to smallpox, in some of its features, other symptoms were more characteristic. I was never satisfied in my own mind that this really was a case of smallpox, but for the sake of safety, we had the patient removed to a place on the northeast block, in a house used as a prison, and security posted to prevent the spread of the contagion, which it should prove to be. In a short time, however, the case was better, and nothing more came of it.

THE FIRST SCARE.

Several years previously, perhaps 25 years ago, Judge Hickland came to the city, has a case of unfavorable smallpox. Dr. Clinton had been the quarantine physician, and I was appointed in his stead. Dr. Clinton had been the quarantined him, but had received no official notification of the appointment. The governor had appointed, in the States, and Secretary Fuller and Jas. T. Caine came to me about the case, to look after it. I said, I am quarantine physician, I tell them that I did not know that I was the quarantine physician, but if I am, I will go and look at the patient. However, I ordered the patient to be removed to the vicinity of the pest house, which was located in about a quarter of a mile beyond the old Indian agency on the east bench, the Judge consented to go to the pest house. Judge Hickland had settled adjoining Dr. Clinton, on the ground that he was not a quarantine physician. Judge H. Wells was at that time Mayor of the city. Hickland got rather tired of the dinner, he had ordered, and he was further spread of the contagion.

VACCINATION CRAZE.

There had been at this time some cases of smallpox at the old pest house, which had been operated upon. One was a desperate case, the patient becoming delirious and escaping from the house. He ran into the mountains, but was overtaken and brought back. He subsequently died. An interesting incident occurring during the illness of this young man, his brother of Dub Cliff City, occurred in the connection. He foolishly exposed himself to the disease, by sleeping in the bed in which the man had died. He did not, however, contract the disease, but he had to be broken, and the boy was brought home supposed as a nurse to the pest house.

The most interesting I know of were those persons who had been exposed to the pest-house; there were perhaps half a dozen cases, all, but three were all immigrants, who had brought the disease with them. One of the parties went from Salt Lake to the Dalles, and from Pocatello, and one other family—that of Mr. Blackwelder, Cambridge. We engaged Dr. Hiram Davis to watch the patients and to remain with them all the time, as they needed constant attention and watching. He had some knowledge of medicine, but was not a regular physician. At the time of the pest-house mentioned except the one mentioned in which the patient ran away to the Indian agency.

There was a great vaccination craze as a result of these cases. All the people were running to the doctors to be vaccinated. There was sore for physicians in the cases at that time. A great many people were vaccinated by Dr. Strickland and others, and to all the Dancers. Many of the people were prejudiced against the disease within clothing a small bag of camphor or assafoetida, as disinfectants which I suppose they have never effect in warding of the disease, a virtue they probably do not possess for South camphor or all other certain remedies. It is not believed that it has any effect on the contagion whatever.

ONE DEATH OCCURRED.

One person died of smallpox in the city. A family in the Sixteenth ward, named Cumberland, had the disease. A Cumberland was conveyed as a nurse at the pest-house. He had had the smallpox when a child, and was in particular enough in disinfecting his clothing before going home, and he took daughter to the Bingham. When I got there the two girls were lying ill of the smallpox, one of them being apparently very ill. I was informed by the mother of the disease, which is a malignant type of smallpox. The boy, a girl about 12 years of age, died. The second, the premises were thoroughly disinfected by the sanitary officer, by order of Dr. Richards, and the two girls in the vicinity took the disease.

In regard to the pest-house, I have not referred at the time. The block on which the Cumberland family lived was quarantined, and the street was barricaded, so that no teams would pass. There was great excitement among the people. I was called upon by the local disease, but there was no outbreak or epidemic of it. I have not heard of any case of the malignant smallpox since that time. We have been particularly fortunate in being free exept from this disease.

ABOUT VACCINATION.

The doctor believes that vaccination is a preventive of the disease. He says that in Germany, vaccination patients a great deal in California and elsewhere, and though often in the same rooms with smallpox patients, he never contracted the disease. He immediately being ill, he thinks he has been vaccinated. The doctor has been electrically vaccinated twice, and has vaccinated himself every year with the lancet, and after, the doctor does not believe in compulsory vaccination. He thinks that to make vaccination compulsory is a free country like this, is not the correct thing to do. Vaccination does not run the person's blood, it prevents the disease, but if a person who has been successfully vaccinated takes the disease, it is a light form of it which is as varioloid.

DANGER FROM SMALLPOX.

The danger from smallpox usually comes it may outlasts the fever, but there is not the same danger in getting or entering the house that there was formerly. The ointments now used prevent the getting to a very great extent. The antiseptic form of smallpox is dangerous, just as the malignant form of scarlet fever and other diseases is dangerous. Smallpox is more dreaded than other diseases, but is perhaps not more dangerous to the whole body either than scarlet fever or measles.

DR. BARCOM FEARS NO EPIDEMIC.

"I believe in compulsory vaccination, because I believe it is to be our only hope of adequately protecting our schools in times of danger. While I am perfectly willing to grant intelligent people the privilege of using their own judgment, the masses are absolutely ignorant on questions of public health and need to be forced to adopt precautions and requirements. Most intelligent physicians consider it careful, and if it could be enforced vaccination prevents smallpox or at least greatly mitigates the severity of the disease, and this appears to be my experience in preventive measures of any character we usually employ are insufficient to prevent preventive health measures and have little faith in the dangers of contagion.

"I believe that many people for fear of a quarantine flag, and the inconvenience attending quarantine, deliberately evade the quarantine regulations; that fearless to our schools are frequently visiting places of contagious disease in the homes of their pupils and that most of our people are ignorant of the dangers to which they are exposed, and of the precautions to be taken in our schools, and are thus not only to carelessness and ignorance, but to the willful evasion of our quarantine laws."

Dr. Barcom says no cases to speak of had an epidemic in this city although in Mexico, where smallpox particularly flourishes, and in which case the disease takes from hold at altitudes as high as that of Salt Lake City, for as the Mexicans are concerned, they are Utah are of a better class, they observe the rules of hygiene and cleanliness when they may be sent to do the rest in the situation.

FOWLER WOULD PROVE IT.

"Would I make vaccination compulsory? asked Dr. Fowler. "By all means; for the sake of people who utilize against the same incorrectly belong to those who need vaccination to be protected, and who are not are safe man risk, in the face of evidence, doubt for also makes the efficacy of vaccination.

The doctor went on to say that in days of Jenner, the disease which the British was taken from a cow and then inoculated into the arm of a human being, and the virus was taken from that person and handed down from one generation to another, so to speak, that the virus was thus perpetuating the subject from former disease. In these days it was possible to furnish the virus from the cow, and to use it in the system, but today, since the use of better virus has become uniform, there is no need of vaccination. The virus used in the vaccination is produced by modern methods.

The virus as used by the profession in America today is furnished by the government, and is produced at Pennsylvania, the same being under the eye of the government, and is subject to the virus on the farm in little metal tubes; with each package is enclosed the required number of tubes, and the virus not being delivered until the vaccinating should be refused to the farm and the virus, if it is not used, is thrown, in the next mail, thus keeping the entire in the hands of the profession. Formerly, the virus was taken from variolic pustules, taken from the arm, to be inoculated of the smallpox disease, and the virus was taken from the vaccinated person.

"There is no need for anyone to raise the old time scarecrow bugs and cry over vaccination."

When asked about the reported case of smallpox at Fort Douglas, Dr. Fowler said that he had not personally seen the case, but from reading the papers he had come to the conclusion that it was not but an ordinary case of chicken-pox. "You may know that my residence at Fort Douglas over a period of thirty years, that I have had some experience with smallpox especially during the time that Judge Hickland had the complaint and I can say that it does not appear to me that the Fort, that we would have heard some more about it by this time." The doctor then referred to the report of the Fort Douglas surgeon, and said that he had noted that attention during the epidemic of nearly thirty years ago, he had some cases of smallpox among his hands, principally in the Alta mining district and some so far south as Anderson and Bingham, and he said that in all the years of his experience, he had never known from time to time several cases of aggravated smallpox to have come in the same time and in the medical men to use effectable doubt to be the diagnosis.

"In large cities, like New York, for instance," continued Dr. Fowler, "when smallpox is more or less in evidence, it is a very easy matter for a physician to make a mistake in the diagnosis, as he may not have seen a case of chicken-pox, so he follows the papers and finds that the disease is prevalent in the city, and he says it is smallpox and the city has been said for diagnosis or some physician who had been sent to the Fort, and he said, "I think." Dr. Fowler said, with a twinkle in his eye, "that the doctor said, "I think." I have seen more than enough of that."

DR. WRIGHT APPROVES IT.

"I believe with genuine enthusiasm in compulsory vaccination as a sanitary measure, and I believe that the purpose of vaccination is to ward off one of the most unfavorable diseases which we have to deal with, and I understand from my estimonials and in found against a procedure designed to prevent the spread of smallpox, which in the face of indisputable facts is reliable to the virtues of vaccination.

"In my opinion, vaccination, as shown by statistics the benign results of this preventative treatment, say in Germany, where it is compulsory, and in Germany, where it is not, in Saxony, for instance, where it is shown that persons treated twice three times, after a period of years, and that the modern disease comes to the disease and shows they contract the attack in a much milder form.

"The few authentic cases that may have happened should not be permitted to weigh against the thousands of cases that would follow an epidemic of smallpox in which this rule is not observed. Vaccination is nothing positive can be proved that the mildness of smallpox in vaccinated persons is caused with a carefully prepared, virus, even therapy—assistant, so far as I know, is the only one. Some of the practical results in combating disease is already shown by the bacteriologists of antitoxin in treating diphtheria."

CHANNING FRONT.

One hundred citizens signed strongly by with the request that the Legislature signed compulsory vaccination. Women should be vaccinated, because they have done a choice of what and those performed it is not so bad after all. The medical profession is divided, the medical profession is divided, to have had something to do with his conversion.
