BOTH SIDES TALK.

Varian to increase to Judge Goodwin's testimony. He owned that the witness's language here was such that not or implication as that which I had been sought to place upon it. Judge Goodwin did not say that Arthur Brown ought to have been killed. What he meant to say, and what the witness intended to quote did say, was that it was a wonder he had not got killed in the excitement there. While admitting that Mr. Brown had many good qualities, counsel claimed that it was a reflection on the morals of his to intimidate and rob the people and have enough with them. Mr. Varian had asked the jury to award the plaintiff a very damages, but Mr. Hilton denied that Brown had been injured to the extent of one cent by writing the Tribune had said of him. His feelings were not cut, and the fact was Arthur Brown entertained some little personal revenge which he now wanted to gratify. There was no evidence of malice here from beginning to end, but an entire absence of malicious intent to do the man injury. It was commendable in a newspaper to "call down" a public man when he escaped to do so on "high horse." There were too many men strolling around Salt Lake with brief authority," wondering why the earth did not quake every time they took a step, and it was such as these upon whom reform should fall. In conclusion counsel made certain there was no wrong in publishing the letter.

Judge Powers followed on the same side, first dealing ceremoniously and severally with the "shade of Shakespeare" and the "immortal Gladstone" which he asserted were not more of yesterday by Attorney Varian. He reminded the jury that they were now asked or required to pass on what the Tribune had said or done in the past, on their verdict must be based solely upon the one issue before the court at this time. Counsel had much to say upon the liberty of the press in this country in which, fortunately, he stated, there was no censorship; no attorney has the power or privilege to strangle himself a despot. The question of the privilege of the press was discussed and thoroughly defined, and the attack upon Judge Goodwin by counsel for the plaintiff yesterday answered in strong terms. Judge Powers submitted that no case for damages whatever had been made out.

Judge Powers was in the midst of his argument when the court adjourned for luncheon. He resumed in the afternoon, and was speaking when the News report closed. Counsel occasionally hoisted over with humor in his frequent references to "my friend Brown," and alluded a good deal of nonsense to the "shade" of Shakespeare present. The plaintiff himself on whom the bar enclosure, apparently one of the most humorous among the general body of listeners, and could not refrain from joining in the laughter which now and again occurred in the wake of the judge's little jokes. Counsel reviewed all the salient points in the testimony and claimed the idea of such an action—the meaning of which, he said, at any rate, ought to have been disposed of in three or four hours—having been brought into court.

To Attorney Rawlins will fall the task of making the closing speech for the plaintiff, and Judge Merritt will then charge the jury, to whom the case will then be given.

There is a good deal of speculation as to the verdict.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE WALLACE LECTURE—General Lew Wallace, author, diplomat and soldier, faced a very handsome audience at the Theater when he stood up to deliver his lecture on Turkey and the Turks. It was hardly such an audience, perhaps, as either Frank G. Carpenter or Harry Watterson drew, but considering that those gentlemen were both booked very heavily in advance, and that Mr. Wallace comes so close to the Kendal engagement—he has every reason to congratulate himself on the gathering that assembled to hear him.

General Wallace's lecture lasted an hour and a half; he speaks with a resonant voice, uses many gestures, but all graceful, and commands his theme in the plain, simple and terse, but powerful and forceful English, which he knows so well how to employ. He made very brief reference to Ben Hur, and devoted all the remainder of his time to telling the story of Turkey and the Turks; it is worth noting that his pronunciation of such frequently used words as "Sultan" and "Koran," is "soultan" and "ouaroun." He endeavored throughout with breathless interest to the close and then gave a hearty round of applause.

General Wallace first gave his first impression on leaving Constantinople. On entering the place he forgot all else save the origin and antiquity of the city. He encountered the inconvenience in the narrow, crooked streets, and envied the pigeons circling in the pure air overhead. "Two books from the Constantinople," said, "the stranger is overrun with dogs and beggars. The dogs belong to no one, and everybody belongs to the beggars. Wonderful variety in the story of human life is afforded by watching the idle sob the and from that great city. People of all classes and nationalities are there congregated. The Turk is jealous of his own, and would, if he could, expel all others. As for the people, every distinguished tourist takes them all to be Turks.

The presence of a red fez does not necessarily imply that the wearer is a Turk. All the subjects of his majesty, the sultan, are compelled to wear the fez, but there are thousands who are not, but who object that use of headgear. At the cafes in the best place I saw the Turk. Round and fat of face, he sits and sips his coffee, happy, contented and contented. His mental power is acute rather than strong. He loves diagnostics and runs to the abstract in reasoning. The Turk possesses no artistic sense, and he took pleasure in wanton destruction of the Jews when the city was taken. Neither are the subjects of the Sultan inclined to merchandise and they are regarded in the East as indifferent merchants. They make rugs as a specialty, and there is nothing from which the Turks suffer more than from hostility among themselves.

Literature is in no sense a fad, the tendency of the country being toward religion. The faith of the Turk has undergone no change. God is still the God, and Mohammed is still his prophet. They possess many good traits of character and heard many so called Christians would profitably imitate the Christianity of the Turk.

Whole in Constantinople the general saw many drunken men, but none of them were natives. The patent water closet is universally adopted by aliens from more enlightened lands. Another trait of the natives is his kindness to dumb beasts. The traveler is never seen to beat his horse, and the horses are not abused, and dogs are not molested. They have the right of way at all times in the streets of cities.

The Turk also has great respect for women. A man of the greatest rank is sufficient to stop a coach of officers with a low bow being struck. The children also the recipients of much attention. Among some Christian sects contrary is almost unknown, but the humblest Turk is a true Christian. He is also a very devout man. The prayer, he says, is short and simple, being applicant is satisfied that God sees and knows him, and that he will grant the request if consistently with the law. Judge Smith sentenced defendant to fifty days in the penitentiary.

David Gladish has brought suit against Robert Jaimes et al., to quiet title on a promissory note, and for foreclosure of mortgage. The note and mortgage have been assigned to plaintiff by L. W. Kenyon, who appears as attorney for plaintiff.

The jury in the case of the People vs. George Hughes, falsely, brought in a verdict of guilty. Friday was set for sentence.

In the case of James Johnson vs. the United States, judgment was set aside as per stipulation on motion of United States Attorney Dick.

Notes and Personals.

A little girl came to the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Hamer yesterday. All well.

The coming election of school trustees will be contested on nonpartisan lines.

Patriarch O. N. Livingston, of Myrum, is visiting friends in this city.

Judge W. N. Dunnbarry was appointed by the court term yesterday as a delegate to the Trans-Mississippi congress.

Daniel Sully will make his bow to a Opera audience in the Opera House this evening as O'Neil, Washington, D. C.

Samuel R. Cushing, aged 41, and Eva N. Holmes, aged 21, both of Montpelier, received a marriage license this morning.

Ex-Sheriff John W. Turner is very sick at the home of his son Charles in this city. He is suffering from nervous prostration, superimposed by an attack of typhoid fever. It is believed he is on the road to recovery.

Sheriff Levy, of Garfield county, has brought in an insane man who was found wandering around the mountains in the Grand canyon. The man has been placed in the asylum. His name is given as Marlin Pasto.

The Provo representatives to the Trans-Mississippi congress are: Judge W. N. Dunnbarry, Mayor H. Bird Crook, Judge J. B. Jones, Ross Stanford and R. A. Harney. They will join the Salt Lake delegation on the outbound R. G. W. train this evening.

There is considerable pilfering going on here these cars. Three pairs of blankets and a coat of cloth were taken from the room of Engineer's alone a few nights ago, and G. T. Slater, from Provo Valley, who was visiting in the Fourth ward, had his harness stolen the same night. No arrests made so far.

The young men of the Fourth ward are getting up a winter's supply of wood for those residents of the ward whose financial circumstances are such that the act of practical Christianity will be highly acceptable at present. The young ladies of the ward will sew for the young men who will saw the wood.

Mr. Louis Hoagey left this evening at 8 o'clock and put up at the Pacific House which they will make their headquarters.

The party will occupy a specially fitted sleeper, which will bear a strikeout on other adventitious news with the words, "Utah Delegation—Trans-Mississippi Congress—Office Stamp on to Omaha."

A considerable number of delegates will also leave over the Rio Grande. It is generally conceded that the Territory will be well represented at the congressional convention.

Constitution Making.

Dr. J. M. Tanner will lecture on this important subject this evening, at 7:30, at the University Social College, No. 273 West First South street. All are invited.

Nebraska Settlers.

It was learned today that twenty families from Nebraska have just arrived into central Utah by team, and that they have moved on prospective farms in the vicinity of Sevier Lake.

Went Up Stairs Today.

The Salt Lake Police force moved from the old quarters in the city hall today to the room on the second floor recently vacated by the city engineer and his assistants.

James McIntyre will enjoy the distinction of being the first offender tried in the new chamber of justice. His name was first and trifling drunk. He was fined $5. Several other cases of a petty character came before the court but all were continued until later in the day.

PROVO.

PROVO, UTAH, NOV. 21, 1894.

A Heavy Damage Suit.

The case of the United States vs Zed Barnhill was called. Prosecuting Attorney Judd prosecuted and John M. Hanson defended. Defendant is charged with fornication alleged to have been committed with Eliza Ann Lockwood, on the 1st day of January, 1894, in Heber, Wasatch county. The jury was out and not rather testified for the prosecution, and the defendant was on the stand in his own behalf. A verdict of guilty was brought in. Defendant was sentenced to three months in the penitentiary this morning.

The first case called this morning was H. W. Hawley vs Camp Bros. Plaintiff sues for $15,000 damages received by reason of a certain contract given to defendants in the letting of 1892 for grading on the Great Northern railroad. He alleges that after he had obtained the contract and stripped from Denver a large number of men, scrapers, etc., and employed Hawley to do the work on the contract, the defendants refused to allow him to go to work on the contract previously given him. On account of this action of the defendants plaintiff claims to have been damaged in the above amount. The case was first tried in May, 1892, in this court and plaintiff was awarded damages amounting to about $4,500. The case was appealed by defendants and sent back for a new trial.

CITIES BUSINESS.

Daniel Bigler, of Wallsburg, was called to the witness stand on a charge of failure of contribution to which he had previously pleaded guilty. He promised to obey the law in the future, and had taken the necessary steps to regulate his family affairs so that he would not be ever considered guilty of violating the law. Judge Smith sentenced defendant to fifty days in the penitentiary.

David Gladish has brought suit against Robert Jaimes et al., to quiet title on a promissory note, and for foreclosure of mortgage. The note and mortgage have been assigned to plaintiff by L. W. Kenyon, who appears as attorney for plaintiff.
