HERE IS A HANDSOME HOUSE.

It is Suitable for a Home at Any time Willing to Spend $8,000.

In every community a good doctor is held in high esteem. Although his visits are not always be welcome, by his kindly sympathy or geniality he carries an atmosphere with him which causes the sick to regret his departure. Consequently the doctor sees homes well known and welcomed as a guide and lawgiver to the town. A doctor's residence should be near the only located in a commodious place of any sense at all times. The office should be on the first floor in front, accessible to the main entrance, with adjoining bell and a speaking tube connecting with the front door.

The illustrations here given represent the plans and a perspective view of a very neat and charming design for a residence suitable for a physician's residence in a large town. It is designed in a plain style of the old Colonial style of architecture. A cellar extends under the entire house, with inner walls and concrete floor, outside entrance and steps. The height of the cellar within is 7 ft. 6 in. A wide veranda extends north across the entire front, with steps to the main entrance elevated by a handsome gabled porch, which, with the handsome tower, gable, dormer windows and chimneys, gives an imposing appearance to the front. From the veranda you enter a large vestibule, which is lighted by a small stained glass window to the side.

From the vestibule you pass to the large reception hall, which is centrally located and communicates with the parlor on the right by means of sliding doors, which can be thrown open at pleasure, making the hall and parlor virtually one room. At the left of the hall is the dining room, which is more secluded than the parlor, the entrance being a door from the hall. The dining room is lighted from the side by three windows grouped together as closely as possible, which gives a pretty effect, both from the exterior and interior. At one end of the dining room is an open fireplace with green tiled hearth and facings and brass fender, with a china closet at the left of the fireplace. At the other end are the doors to the pantry and rear veranda or porch. Back of the hall is the kitchen, connected in one, communicating with the dining room through the pantry by double hinged doors and with the hall by means of a passage under the main stairs. The kitchen is provided with a stick or range, forty gallon copper boiler, etc., sink and water tray. From the rear veranda are steps leading to the yard in the rear of the house.

The doctor's office, or library, is on the ground floor, circular in plan, and so arranged as to fill in the angle between the hall and dining room. It is lighted by three windows, so grouped as to concentrate the light near one part of the room, which is available for examination when requires good light, or for a desk. An open fireplace connects with the bookwork of the dining room chimney.

The floor of the first story is finished, the first layer consisting of surface, and be nailed to the floor beams, over which is spread a layer of manilla paper, and tongued and grooved yellow pine floor to other the house is plastered, trimmed and thoroughly dried out.

In the second story are four large chambers, staircase hall and bathroom, and no attic storage. The bathroom is located directly over the kitchen, so that there would need in the direct matter of arranging the plumbing pipes. The attic floor is tongued and grooved throughout, and all is unfinished except the hall and one room at present. By an additional expense $500 a dining room or bedroom for Bridget in the third story of the house, together with another bathroom.

It will be noticed that the details of the exterior work are neat and simple; the veranda railings are inclined and shingled, giving a very cozy and comfortable appearance to the exterior in the same manner of entire stage. The exterior woodwork is all painted two coats—the body of the building in light tints, with trimmings of a darker shade. This house can be erected in Iowa where the price of labor is not so high as it is here for $3,000, and in Utah it would exceed this figure. H. W. Ross.

Block Island fishermen are having poor luck with mackerel, and several have been giving up trying to catch the fish. Thus far the total catch is about half what it was at the same time last year.

Of all his decorations, the late Emperor Frederick most prized the medal which was given him for saving a man from drowning many years ago.

Arrested, Tied Hatched.

Monday William Jones and Charles Smith, two young Canadians, came to Ulster to enjoy a day's pleasure. They devoted the day to seeing the sights and expended their money in various ways. They thereupon decided to pawn two watches which were in their possession, and by attempting to do this they fell into the clutches of the law very suddenly. At the police station they told their sweethearts, Nettie Perry and Hettie Dutley, of Canadian, had gone from the watches, and Chief of Police Dagwell used the telephone to find out whether the story was true. The young women immediately swore out warrants for the arrest of the young men, claiming they had always loaned them the watches, and United States Marshal J. E. Wilkins came to Ulster Tuesday and took the team back to their native town.

They were arraigned before Justice Nutchoff and the young women came not side to establish their charges of larceny. It appeared, however, that while they had given their hearts freely and wholly to the young men, they had only loaned them the watches, but the crime of larceny was not present, and the young men were discharged from custody.

At the point of the proceedings a reconciliation took place. Romance was displayed in both cases, and it was said the first prepared. Thus the whole affair could be nicely arranged in a few minutes by a couple of weddings. The positive most interested appeared to this pleasant way out of the affair, and Justice Nutchoff tied up the knots and with Jonathan Miss Dutley became the bride of Mr. Jones and Miss Perry was married to Mr. Smith.—Ulster Observer.

He Kept His Teeth.

There was one man in New London before the college boat race had ended who was a refreshing trend to those who were in the Connecticut town. He had a son who was coming in one of the university boats, and he was an example of the paternal—those still which ever grew old, but which seldom age. Here was a man sixty years old, who spent three weeks in New London following college crews from one end of the town to the other. The night on this with a number of young men who were behind it all. He came really was one of the sentiments which underlined his character of his college days.

He was as understandable again with the undergraduates who were friends of one of Lincoln. Whenever he saw a college man where he knew, whether the youngster was 100 or his uncle away, the old man would hurry off, crying after the owner, "Hilloo, old man, don't a minute." The college boy from a graduate was one of the most popular men to be found near the finishes all four days spent on the Mohegan Thames.—New York Tribune.

An Indian Scale Chamber.

Joseph Parlier, of Ulster county, has invented a regulator to run electricity as a scale machine. Yesterday was his last opportunity to display his powers. He and Samuel Bear hired a rig, and accompanied by Mrs. Bear drove to Tarwell, over twelve miles distant. He seems they alighted to gather some wild raspberries, when they were attacked by outlaws. They were in a pitiful state. A small terrier which accompanied Mrs. Bear was killed, and almost instantly called to twice his size. Mr. and Mrs. Bear fled and called for Mr. F. to follow, but he stood his ground, and the snakes, which appeared to gather from every quarter, began to double round his feet and act as if they had found a long lost friend.

Mr. F. now pulled up one and ordered Mr. B. to get an old barrel at a house near by. This was procured and Mr. F. put the reptiles into it and brought them back to Kingsbury. While in English Mr. F. gave several exhibitions of his power over the snakes, such as wrapping them round his neck and body, and entering them around in the barrel with his naked arm.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

A Statue of Andrew Hofer.

The emperor Francis Joseph has visited the sculptor Natter's studio to inspect the statue which he is completing of Andreas Hofer, the heroic Tyrolese who defended his country and was shot by the French in 1809. The statue is to be the central figure of a monument to be erected on Mount Isel, facing Innsbruck, with a relief bearing the inscription, "Fur Gott, Kaiser und Vaterland." The figure of the handsome peasant in the picturesque Tyrolese costume will stand bearing on high the Austrian flag. The beautiful face surmounted by the simple broad brimmed hat is copied from a good picture of Hofer taken during his life, and now the property of the Count of Meran, who has lent it to the sculptor. The emperor was very much pleased with the status of the popular national hero.—London News.

A Courageous Hero.

A day or two before Frederick Brubaker lost his life there was erected in Washington, Pa., a stone stone tragic and not too heroic than that. Walter Jones, aged fourteen years, and three younger companions went to bathing and got beyond their depth. Jones could swim, the others could not. But, instead of saving himself, as he could easily have done, he set about trying to rescue his companions. He succeeded in placing one of them safely to shore and was in the act of landing the others when the death grip of the water about him took him down and they all drowned within reach.—Pittsburg Commercial Gazette.

A Cow's Motherly Love Belongs to Her Calf.

Recently, one of the cows had a calf which so one of the farm hands was able to find the day after its birth. A search proved a failure until some one suggested a novel scheme. It was to take a dog into the lot, when, in all probability, the cow would return to her calf to defend it. The dog was brought, and sure enough the cow started for a clump of bushes and among them the calf was found, where the horses had concealed it.—Hartford Courant.

The Chilian war has had a very serious effect on the English hamakers who supply the majority of Chilians. The latter have been so busy fighting that they have had no time to attend to their tombstones.

A firewheel weighing over twenty tons, and twenty feet in diameter, with a kinetic fuse, is a rarity of no small measurement. Such a one was recently sent to Massachusetts.

THE CRY OF MILLIONS
OH, MY BACK!
THIS IS NOW.
SOON IT WILL BE TOO LATE.
I have been troubled some years with a kidney or back ache, and have used many different remedies and have spent much money for medicine, and the life of relief I have received is not worth the price of one box of your Kidney Pills. I am now 65 years of age, and have been a sufferer from my youth up. I have tried everything I could hear of, but your Kidney Pills are the only medicine that ever gave me relief. When I saw your Kidney Pills advertised I thought I would try them, as I had tried so many other things. I have used two boxes and am well. I recommend my friends to use Kidney Pills when they need a good medicine. It has my hearty endorsement of all the praise it has received. Yours truly, G. A. TUTTER.
