AROUND THE COURTS.

The Territorial Supreme Court's First Meeting.

A BRIEF MARRIED LIFE.

Short Orders Made by Judge Zane To-day—Action in Regard to a Promissory Note, etc.

The Judges of the Territorial Supreme Court have decided to formally meet on Saturday morning next, according to arrangement, and then adjourn until, probably, the 12th inst. No business of any kind will be transacted on the first named day. It is believed that before the 12th Judge Anderson's successor will have been appointed.

SETTING OF CIVIL CASES.

The first three-quarters of an hour of the sitting of the Third District Court this morning was given up to the setting of civil cases for trial between the 8th and 15th inst., inclusive.

THAT PERSONAL INJURY CASE.

The remainder of the time after 10:30 up to the noon adjournment was occupied with the further hearing of the damage suit brought by John A. Larson against the Mingo Furnace company for personal injuries.

AN INFLUX OF LAWYERS.

There was a large crowd of local attorneys in Judge Zane's court for the first hour this morning, while the setting of the civil calendar was going forward.

THE CHARGE OF MURDEROUS ASSAULT.

The grand jury resumed their labors this morning and took up the investigation of the case of the man Sawyer, who is held on a charge of murderously assaulting Mrs. Phil Adams, the wife of the colored shoeblack, under circumstances already fully reported in the columns of the News. Mrs. Adams, who is still suffering great pain from the effects of the injuries inflicted upon her by the mysterious assailant, was brought down from her home in the Eighteenth ward in a conveyance, and assisted upstairs to the grand jury room, in the Dooly building, by her husband and nephew, who supported her on either side. The poor woman moaned piteously, and remarked as she reached the grand jury chamber, "Oh, dear, I wouldn't have cared if he hadn't shot me here" (meaning in the abdomen). It was with great difficulty that she walked along. Her presence attracted quite a number of persons about the sojourners in the building.

A BRIEF MARRIED LIFE.

One of the bristled documents in the shape of a divorce complaint that has reached the files for some time was the one filed this morning in the Third district court by Wm. R. Dodge, who prays the court through his attorneys (Young, Young & Moyle) to release him from the matrimonial shackles which since 26 November, 1889, have bound him to his wife, Margaret A. Dodge. In the month of the year named the parties intermarried at Logan, Cache county, but only a month or so later, namely, on January 26th of the present year, Mrs. Dodge, as plaintiff asserts, without any cause whatever, abandoned him. On the ground of desertion he seeks the divorce.

SUED ON A PROMISSORY NOTE.

Goldsmith & Co., clothiers, brought suit today in the Third District court against Carl August Westman, Carl Ruth Augusta Westman, May E. Hamilton, and Peter A. Dooley, to recover $500, with interest at 10 per cent per annum from the 15th of December, 1891, on a promissory note secured by mortgage.

JUDGE ZANE'S ORDERS.

In the case of Henry Hanstock vs. Moylan C. Fox, executor, the motion for a new trial was overruled this morning by Judge Zane, thirty days stay being allowed.

The case of Mitchell Wing vs. John E. Dooly et al. was dismissed by consent.

PECULIAR CASE OF INSANITY.

Deputy Sheriff Lewis's Terrible Struggle With a Maniac.

After eight hours of hard work Deputy Sheriff Lewis brought to the city from Superior Subdivision, near North Point, last night, Antone Peterson, a powerful and desperate maniac of twenty-five years of age.

Peterson recently arrived from Sweden, his native land, said Deputy Lewis today. He was in a peculiar state. He has been secured in his since he replaced and some time ago it was suggested that he be sent to the hospital where he could be treated for his affliction. He had a strange and unmanageable affection for his father with whom he lived. It is said that his devotion to his parent amounted to a mania and he refused absolutely to be separated from him but was told that he must be taken away. Always belligerently he became more violent, breaking out occasionally in his prospective parting. Soon, it is said his mind became unhinged to a degree that it became dangerous to go near him without a club. Neighbors had complained to the authorities that a complaint was sworn out against him which resulted in his arrest. Deputy Lewis and Deputy Hall were sent as an officer for those with Peterson was the accident.

The member stood at a bed in the city jail and stated and taught and growled all the while. Twice he was taken before the Probate court and each outburst was in his sanity. While in the court room he had an attack of three fits, he was pronounced a violent maniac and ordered to the Territorial Home asylum at Provo.

ARE YOU READY

The Performance Sale of Those Who Plan Life Not Worth Living.

Two distinguished modern English authors have taken for a story theme the question of suicide. Mr. Robert Louis Stevenson told of the drollery of a man who chose the extremest of measures. Mr. J. M. Barrie has written a somewhat similar story called "Better Dead." In one, Providence is governed solely considering the mortal trouble, and of his errors in judgment of a young man who fell in love in the wrong way and married.

We confess that there is a certain fascination in the idea of Mr. Barrie's book, so marred from beginning the story is so bold and in its suggestion. In a Connecticut town there would be such a real suicide club which now seems to be the exclusive property of its members. The telegraph occasionally threatened a very serious death of some melancholy member who, in joining, had promised to be prominent in the society that he wondered himself "better dead." He had struggled along until the burden of life became too heavy, and finally had put himself into the hands of an enterprising whose business it was to furnish a quick and peaceful exit.

"Better dead!" Who are the people for whom life has no further charm? Are they those who, poor fools, have fallen in unpleasant places? Are they the poor in spirit? Or, on the other hand, are they of that comfortable number on whom fortune has smiled too generously? Are they those who have bought heavily, but to their sorrow? Are they those who have sold short in the market? Are they those who have lost money in speculation? Are they those who have failed in business? Are they those who have fallen in unpleasant places? Are they the poor in spirit? Or, on the other hand, are they of that comfortable number on whom fortune has smiled too generously? Are they those who have bought heavily, but to their sorrow? Are they those who have sold short in the market? Are they those who have lost money in speculation? Are they those who have fallen in business? Are they those who have fallen in unpleasant places? Are they the poor in spirit?

Some of them do strictly the class from which spun suicide comes. The latest number of Harper's Bazar contains a paper by Mrs. Lyman Abbott, "Some Women Who Have Failed," in which she discusses the question of those who take a less drastic but equally fatal point, so far as social honors and their position. The force who has "failed socially, due to fatal in a vain, women, not to the standard of the world, or, rather, anybody who is really better dead." Of course there are people who seem to be in a struggle being gone, and to wake, no future wakes and also no future pleasure. But consider them in relation to some new interest in life. Is there not help for those who are so poor? Is there not help for those who are so poor? Would they not better give a dissolution pause before they take the fatal step? Assuming the world itself is the highway to any goal, is not and peace for them. The lower who takes the road keep the low's end is really to meet yourself, or, if there be any one person of degree in the question, those persons who would that form be not those who allow to be a disorder of kinds to be beautiful only, but benefit in record with the observed form of life.

The law can not always meet the case, but the moral sense of the world has a great capacity for suffering, but Heaven is immense compared with pain. So we say that of all the reasons for suicide unexplained here is the slightest.

Yes, and we know that, all "better dead" reasons are bad. The man or woman who is afraid to respond to the call of life is a coward. It is a good, full, better to be a living dog than a dead lion, and while you wait, see something, be somebody. Stop worrying and help not only yourself, but somebody else.—Indianapolis News.

Starting a Good Joke.

A Philadelphia dispatch announced last evening that a joking club in Boston (no offence, Bostonians) had sent a telegram to Mr. Cleveland asking him if he would accept a place in the cabinet if it should happen to be offered him. Well, the joke, if it is a joke, may be clever, but it seems to us that it is a little too far-fetched. Why should the joke be started in Boston? Why should the joke be started in Philadelphia? Why should the joke be started in Boston? Why should the joke be started in Philadelphia? Why should the joke be started in Boston? Why should the joke be started in Philadelphia?
