THE EXILE.

By L. M. Montgomery.

We told her that her far-off shore was bleak and dour to view,
And that her sky was dull and drear while ours was smiling blue.

GEO. D. WATT.

George D. Watt, of whom the above is a picture, justly claimed two notable distinctions. He was the first person baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints on the other side of the Atlantic, and he was the first official shorthand reporter of the Church.

NOTES.

Mrs. Humphry Ward is expected to arrive in this country in March for a long postponed visit. She will be the guest of Mrs. Frederick W. Whitridge, of New York, who, being the daughter of Matthew Arnold, is her cousin.

Fashioned Girl" (Alcott); "Grimm's Fairy Tales;" and "Evangeline" (Longfellow).

Except for the Shakespeare collections the largest and most interesting collection of the relics of an English poet is the memorials of Thomas Chatterton now treasured by the City of Bristol, where Chatterton was born.

A list of fiction to be published by the Macmillan company in the course of the spring season, proves that this will be in many respects a notable year for novel readers.

"A few months ago," says The Bookman, "we called attention to the very curious predominance of the letter 'C' in the life and work of Mr. Winston Churchill, pointing out that his home was in Cornish, his official address at Concord, his club The Century and his books already published 'The Celebrity,' 'Richard Carvel,' 'The Crisis,' 'The Crossing,' and 'Coniston.'"

BOOKS.

"Europe on $4 a Day," author of how to "Go it Alone," by "A. Rollington" (Charles Newton Hood). The Rolling Stone club, publishers, McKnight, N. Y.

"He who saves along the way May go again some other day."

This couplet with which Mr. Hood heads one of the chapters in the new and revised edition of his illuminating travel book, is a condensed explanation of its popularity.

The little publication has had an odd history. It grew out of a discussion among the members of the Rolling Stone club as to whether, by careful planning, a high class and perfectly comfortable European tour of 75 days duration could be made at an average expense of not over $4 a day, or under $3 for the trip.

mission fees, theaters, lunches, fruit, papers and magazines, laundry; in fact, every expense, including all of the items usually classed as "extras."

The report of the trip was so complete and so interestingly told that the club published a modest edition of 500 copies for members and their friends. So many people found it useful that a large second edition was printed, then a third and now a fourth.

The information is complete and with nothing vague, including how to get a passport, what guide books are needed and their cost, how to book passage at low rates with correct addresses, how to get low priced railroad tickets for the entire European tour in advance, with exact cost, what to do on landing, the address of every hotel and pension at which the writers stopped with correct addresses and rates, also a list of other hotels and pensions recommended in each city, just what tips were paid and to whom, and all other information in such detail that, with the enlarged 1908 edition in hand, anybody might be able to follow the trail with complete safety, comfort, independence and economy.

The Book of Garden Pests, is the title of the latest book on the control of garden pests. It is written by R. Hooper Pearson, F. R. H. S., editor of the Gardeners' Chronicle, and published by the Gardeners' Co., London.

The Youth's Companion for this week is a Washington's Birthday number and the cover has a colored colonial picture illustrative of the time. Several interesting short stories and the continuation of the serial by Arthur Standwood Pier, "The New Boy," is contained in the number, besides the usual good stories in the departments.

THE DESERT NEWS.

MAGELLAN STRAITS Through Which U. S. Fleet Passed Last Week.

It is doubtful if any great salt water highroad is so little known as the Strait of Magellan. Baffin Bay, in the Arctic, is probably about as familiar to the minds of most persons as is the southern passageway that bears the name of the mighty Portuguese explorer.

The largest island is Tierra del Fuego, and one of the smallest is Horn Island, at the lowest extremity of which rises the dreaded cape of that name. Cape Horn is no more a part of the South American mainland than are the Hebrides a part of the mainland of Scotland.

It is more than twice as long as the navigable Hudson river. You could drop the entire Hudson Highlands, Palisades and all, into the wild gash of the Magellan pathway and not know the difference, just as you might drop the Alps into some of the Himalayan valleys. The Hudson even at its mouth is not notably deep; probably 50 feet, or from eight to nine fathoms, opposite New York.

It is through this savage water way that our sixteen battle ships have threaded their way, the most powerful fleet that ever crossed the equator and headed deep into the ocean waters of the south. That the season is midsummer in that region means no approval of active meteorological change from midwinter, other than that of a prolonged daylight, instead of the darkness that covers the world there in June, July and August.

did not breathe deeply of satisfaction when the open Pacific, stormy though it be, stretched away before them. The Patagonian archipelago is unequalled in the world for its gloomy weather; its gales of wind, the number of its islands and rocks and its innumerable water passages, the largest of which is the Strait of Magellan.

That night Magellan summoned all the commanding officers to council on the flagship. They refused to obey. The commander-in-chief then dispatched a small armed force with a special order on board the Victoria, commanded by the ring-leader, a member of an old and powerful Spanish family. The order directed the captain to accompany the force to the flagship. He smiled as he tore up the order, sardonically observing that he was not to be caught in that simple manner.

He was immediately stabbed to death by order of Magellan, and his crew, appalled by the fall of their commander-in-chief, surrendered. The ship then weighed and proceeded over alongside the flagship, which was lying at the mouth of the harbor. Another one of the fleet followed her voluntarily, blocking the entrance and preventing the escape of the rest. When they finally made the attempt, they were swept by the cannonades of the mighty trio and were compelled to yield.

At length spring arrived again on the bleak coast of Lower Patagonia, and Magellan made preparations for continuing his dreary voyage. He knew that he could trust his subordinate only to a certain degree, but the enormous moral influence of the man, his iron will, swept down every barrier that stood in his path, even as Hawkins, who, banded his friend at the foremast for attempting to incite insubordination among the crew.

Therefore, in September of that year, corresponding to March in the northern hemisphere, the fleet once more weighed and stood out of the harbor of Port St. Julian, and once again this mighty seaman set his vessel's heads toward the unknown south. History does not care much for the fact that only to the expedition six per cent home from the expedition six per cent. It knows only that Ferdinand Magellan forced that sea and that land to yield their secrets, and history makes no further mention of his journey to the south until on Oct. 2, 1520, when the commander in chief himself noticed first that the land here away sharply toward the west, for they were coasting along with the land aboard, searching for the expected passage.

This certainly was Magellan's day of vindication, for it was the entrance to the water way. St. Ursula's day it was, and Magellan christened the promontory the Cape of the Eleven Thousand Virgins, curtailed in these days of rapid transit to simple Cape Virgins.

On Nov. 25, his squadron emerged into the south Pacific, precisely five weeks after it had passed in by Cape Virgins.—Paul Eve Stevenson in Chicago Record-Herald.

Many Kidney Cases in Salt Lake. The famed Dr. Loomis of Bellevue Hospital has declared that his autopsies show that nine-tenths of men and women over forty have kidney disease, and as probably one-tenth of the people in Salt Lake City are over forty, nine-tenths of these would mean a large number. But if Dr. Loomis's statement is only partly correct, it would show the astonishing prevalence of kidney disease in the entire country. The fact is that kidney trouble is not only curable but commonly gets it if it is not treated early. It is not a chronic but an acute disease, and it has been so shown by the census deaths from kidney troubles—now over 45,000 annually. This frightful annual death toll also shows the futility of the scores of medicines that claim to cure kidney trouble. While many of them are possibly helpful during the first few weeks of the curative that gets recovery in the chronic or supposed fatal stage, and we sent for it in the interest of people here, it has proven inefficiency in just this class in nine-tenths of all cases, and ultimately incurable forms. As it is impossible to say whether a given case of kidney disease is in the first or second stage, the only sensible plan if you have kidney trouble is to start on the only thing that will reach it in both stages.

JOHN A. JOHNSON, Mr. Henry Watterson's candidate for the presidency, is shown here in a characteristic pose. The Minnesota governor has "made good" indeed in his political career, and there are hosts of Americans outside his own state who admire him greatly and are interested in whatever he does and says. He is such a brilliant example of the self made man that his country well may be proud of him. Some of his admirers have compared him and his career with Abraham Lincoln and his upbuilding, but beyond the naked poverty of their early days there seems to be little warrant for the comparison. Not the least admirable quality displayed by the Minnesota governor is his apparent integrity in the matter of his candidacy. At all the suggestions of his enthusiastic friends to that effect he only smiles gravely and shakes his shapely head.
