YARNS ABOUT THIBET.

STORIES ABOUT LIFE IN AN ALMOST UNKNOWN COUNTRY.

A Section of Middle Asia That Has Attracted Many Able Chinese Story Tellers—Some Remarkable Accounts of Strange Doings in Chinese Writings.

A curious collection of facts respecting Thibet, as represented by various Chinese authors and travelers, has been made by Mr. Woodville Rockhill, who has himself explored that mysterious country of middle Asia.

On New Year's day at the capital city, Lhasa, there begins a season of festivity. One of the entertainments is called the "Spectacle of the Flying Spirits." The performers stretch an enormously long rope made of hide all the way from the top to the bottom of Mount Potala; then they fasten grooved blocks of wood to their chests and sail down the line like so many swallows. On top of this same mountain dwells the pope of the Buddhist religion, who is called the tale lama. He is also the incarnation of the god which chiefly protects mankind.

On the 30th of the month there is another great sport when the king of the devils is driven away. A priest is chosen to play the part of the tale lama, and a layman, selected for his wit and activity, takes the role of the demon. The latter smears his face with black and white paint, and goes before the pretended tale lama for the purpose of mocking him. The two have an argument on religion, the issue of which is finally referred by mutual agreement to a cast of dice.

These dice are very big ones, about the size of apples, but the poor fiend has no show at all in the gamble, for his die is black on every side, while the lama's has the highest number on each of its faces. In Thibet, as in Christian countries, it is always laudable to defraud the devil.

Being beaten, the king of the devils is frightened and runs away, with all the populace after him, firing guns and muskets, so that he is obliged to hide at length in a hole in the mountain, where provisions have previously been placed [illegible]

Before the cause of consumption was known (that was only a few years ago) we did not know how Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil did so much good in consumption and in the conditions that lead to consumption.

The explanation is interesting. We send it free in a book on CAREFUL LIVING.
