

WESTERN NEWS CULLINGS.

Coal Mine Fire in the Rock Springs District.

CRIMES AND OTHER TRIFLES IN IDAHO.

A Tremendous Sturgeon from Snake River—Many Accidents and Casualties.

Road Springs Mine.—A terrible explosion was caused here on Wednesday about 2:30 p.m. by the sound of the fire whistle. It was so loud that men and women and children were seen running away and scattered in the main way. As soon as the explosion for all the smoke and dust began to come out immediately which caused a great excitement among the miners for some of them had to travel about two miles through the smoke and dust to the surface, and that a long way where a man knew there is danger ahead. All got out safely. The fire brigade and citizens came to the scene of the explosion as the time was but five minutes after it had been set off. The fire was put out in the Rio, it was only down at No. 3 entry and had a good stream of water playing on it. It was discovered, however, that the fire had not gone out, and the firemen went back to the right, and the fire was extinguished. The fire was supposed to have been started accidentally by a fireman who was working close to the place.

Shiboe Star.—Considerable excitement was created in E. C. Hall's news room on Wednesday afternoon over the discovery of the largest gold nugget ever obtained, which weighed a trifle over sixteen carats. Mr. Hall had been looking for a few hours for success when he struck in, finally when he struck this precious stone. The stone is dimensions fit five fingers long and one and three-fourths wide, and three-eighths thick. When he thinks it is of a brilliant lustre and in the rough is valued at $100. A number of people from the city have driven out to see the find, and the find and extend their congratulations.

Shadow Journal.—About 1 o'clock on Friday, people in the vicinity of the Hot Sulphur Park were startled by the report of a pistol shot, and on going to the spot found a body lying on the ground. Both hands were upon the head, a ghastly hole in his clothing and breast, just above the left nipple, while on the floor by the body was a large portion of a revolver. The bullet had entirely passed through the body, being picked up from beneath him in the bed by Dr. Belmont. He stated that he had a father in Portland, Oregon, and that he had been beyond this little known of him, as he spoke but a few words after committing the deed, sinking gradually until the midnight of his day.

Dolan Disaster.—J. H. Harrigan, the other day had stakes from a stone river strung, whose length was ten feet and weighed four hundred pounds. The fish was caught by H. F. Conner.

Bodie Journal.—One of those disastrous accidents which a house is ever exposed to which the gossips cannot entirely prevent, occurred at the Pike's Peak mine last Sunday morning. Andrew L. Price was working in the mine with a gang of workmen, when a bucket of rock, weighing about ten pounds, fell from the top, crushing the unfortunate miner to death almost instantly. Never before has such an accident been caused by an imperfect break, which was known to be unsafe, but which was set free.

Maha River.—Frank Albin was slain with a ponytail by Phoenix Hall, a member of the gang. Ten or twelve rounds were made, giving the rider, who was not mounted, a mortal wound, and his life was cut through. Dr. M. L. Davidson dressed the wound, and the patient was sent home.

Pigskin Capital—Emporia, Kan., June 27.—A capital day was had in America during mill late yesterday afternoon. 25,000 miners, the Miller, understood to crawl over a huge hill with their families, pack what恐怕 they could not bear to depart toward the setting sun. Many of the outfit have excellent live stock—particularly horses; with them, and especially with the mares, having a load of grain to the prairie, had a hard ride. Families left our Nebraska neighbors and are traveling lighter.

Buffalo John.—The flow of immigrants through the mountains is something unprecedented in the history of northern Wyoming. Not a day passes that does not witness the arrival of two to twenty outfit. The greatest number of emigrants come from Kansas and Nebraska, where the living on hill successive droves forced them to abandon their teams in the timbered bottoms, and then depart toward the setting sun. Many of the outfit have excellent live stock—particularly horses; with them, and especially with the mares, having a load of grain to the prairie, had a hard ride. Families left our Nebraska neighbors and are traveling lighter.

Wyoming Herald.—For more than five years the galls in this section at Black Rock have not been tall as at present. Many give the reason, the prairie where stock has not run, better hay can be cut than was harvested any time last fall. While the cause of the galls in this spring may have caused the atmosphere to become cool, vegetation nevertheless, has been fair on the jumps. Cattle are in prime condition and are in good health.

Wyoming Register.—A few days ago two men were hunting in the mountain near Maizel City. They noticed a wounded eagle alighted near high in the air and then, descending, light on the ground. A boy, a boy, the elasticity was set in a state of low tension and still tension, they soon found an eagle's nest. The mother, a ponderous bird, dived off with a frightened yell. Two large, unwieldy young birds followed her. After a long, high affair, about three feet from the nest, the parents and son were killed; the other was brought to Brightwood, brightwood. It is now in the possession of J. P. Jacobsen. In the nest next door also found a number of dead crows, hawks and ravens, carried out a display of vultures and were as follows for the owners that were to come from the same camp.

KILLED AT THEIR POSTS.

THE DESPERATE STRUGGLE OF THE GREEKS AT THERMOPYLE.

It Was a Fierce Struggle Undertaken by Leonidas in Order to Secure the Passage and Stimulate the Courage of His Own People.

Opposite Site of Ancient Persian Invasion.

REXSTAD and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with another nation of Persians, who were called the Medes. This struggle took place at Thermopylae, which is a narrow pass between two mountains. The Persians wanted to cross this pass to attack the Spartans, who were defending it. The Spartans, under their leader Leonidas, fought bravely and died fighting. They were outnumbered, but they fought with all their might. The Persians were unable to cross the pass, and Leonidas and his men won the battle.

The Spartans undertook a fierce struggle with the Persians.

Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at the gates of Thermopylae.

More than ten thousand years ago a nation of Greeks, who were called the Spartans, had a fierce struggle with