AN EXTRAORDINARY RUSSIAN REGIMENT.

The Pavlovsky, or the Regiment of Paul presents an appearance which would be grotesque if it were not imposing. All the men—pray do not laugh—have cocked noses. Every soldier with a nez retrousse, who is of the proper height, is sent to this regiment, which was formed by Paul in one of his eccentric freaks, and a very determined pug is eligible if it be accompanied with sunken eyes and high cheek-bones. But more than this. The men, clean shaven like all the Russian soldiers except on the lip, wear their mustaches brushed upward toward the ears, which gives them a strange and savage aspect. This bizarre and ferocious appearance is increased by the shape of their head-dress, which is like a sugar-loaf with one side cut away; an angular section of a cone, with the round side to the front. On this side the shako, or whatever it is, consists of a brass plate; at the back of it is a curious tuft or pompon, sticking out horizontally, so as to be parallel with the lower part of the wearer's nose. The brass front is religiously preserved should it have been pierced by a ball, and is worn only by deserving soldiers. Some of them have been perforated in two, three or four places in the days of Catherine II. and in Suwaroff's campaign, where the regiment greatly distinguished itself; and on the under part of each plate is engraved the name of the soldier who wore it when the ball came in such unpleasant proximity to him. Should one of these plates be worn out with age, its form is scrupulously imitated, and the holes renewed with the greatest care. The regiment, when at the march past, always carries bayonets at charge. Altogether, the look of these four thousand odd men, all of whom are over six feet, is very novel and striking, and if they are half as ugly in the fight as they are on the parade, they must prove most formidable antagonists. They are dressed like the other regiments of the Guard, with the exception of this helmet.—[Moscow Cor. of the London Times.

POWER OF MIND.—It is mind, after all, that does the work of the world; so that the more there is of mind, the more work there is accomplished. A man, in proportion as he is intelligent, makes a given force accomplish a greater task—makes skill take the place of muscles—and with less labor, gives a better product. If all the mechanical labor in England was performed by hand, it would require every full grown man in the world.

Mr. Edward Ward, a noted traveler who visited Boston in 1668, says: 'A Captain of a ship, who had been on a long voyage, happened to meet his wife and kissed her in the street, for which he was fined 10s.'
