PROVO, UTAH, Nov. 17, 1894.

Court Business.

The case of Belknapt and Kinney vs Samuel Liddard & Co. came up before Judge Smith, a jury having been waived. The suit was brought for $500, which was not denied, and the only question was in regard to the liability of Charles and George Cook, who deny being partners in the firm of Samuel Liddard & Co. Evidence in regard to the partnership was heard.

Judge Miner decided that the action of defendants had been such as to lead a third party to believe a partnership existed and judgment was entered again of all the defendants.

The parties seem willing to their guilt at the the preliminary examination was held at Sandy, but pleaded in extenuation that Mr. Moss, the husband of the woman, had gone away and had given his wife to Peterson when he left.

After the examination of witnesses the case was committed without argument.

The $250 subscribed by Provo business men, as mentioned in yesterday's News, was to be used as a reward for evidence leading to the conviction of incendiarism, and not "to be used as evidence that would convict incendiaries," as the article read after the proof reader left it.

BEGINNING OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

A SOURCE OF THE GREAT RIVER SEVERAL BEYOND A DOUBT.

[Minneapolis Tribune.]

The origin of the Father of Waters is determined at last, after centuries of disputes. Dr. Elliott Coues has just returned to Washington from Lake Itasca and the sources of the Mississippi. He made no discovery such as being the purpose of his trip, but his investigations have definitely established the accuracy of the observations recorded by Nicollet and Hubbard. The recent confusion of Capt. Glazier is set at naught, and a much-vexed geographical question may now be considered as finally settled.

"I have stepped across the Mississippi river," said Dr. Coues yesterday. "It was easy, for the stream was only about eight inches wide and two inches deep. I have seen the Father of Waters where he rises literally out of the ground, as curious as infant rivulet, meandered to cut the United States in twain with the mighty volume of his south flow. To reach the sources is a long and difficult journey. From Duluth I went to the termini of the Duluth & Winnipeg railway, at the little village of Deer Lake, Itasca county, Minn. From I hired a bush-hack cabin and a man to pole it, and proceeded up the river to Lake Itasca.

"I reached the lake after ten days' rambling through a pathless wilderness. Hardly any inhabitants were to be found in the region, save a few Chippewa Indians in seasonal villages, chiefly in the neighborhood of Cass lake and Leech Winnibigoshish. Maps are very scarce in Northern Minnesota. I had to make a thorough exploration of that body of water and the surrounding country. My visit was inspired chiefly by the astronomical fact I was about to publish a new edition of 'Page's Travels' with critical notes, and I found it desirable to examine the sources of the Mississippi on myself, particularly in view of the recent dispute on the subject.

"The whole of the Itasca basin, comprising twenty-five square miles, has been set apart by the legislature of Minnesota as a state park, in order that the natural beauty of the region of the sources of the Mississippi river may be preserved. Timber and game within the limits of the park are protected by law from depredations. Lake Itasca is a lovely mass of water embedded in the primeval forest, 1,575 feet above the sea.

"Itasca is so called Ex lake by the Indians, because it has a three-pronged shape, like the head of an elk with antlers outspread. Comparatively narrow throughout, it is about three miles in extreme length. Almost in the center is a wooded island, making what one expert and hardy woodsman, Schoolcraft, thought was the north arm of the lake are a few white sandbars. Lake Itasca is by far the biggest of several hundred lakes and pools in the Itasca basin.

"Lake Itasca is a mere expansion of the infant Mississippi. Take it from a small stream which is the veritable Father of Waters—the original Ambijiscoja, as Nicollet called it. It issues from spring at a distance of only half a dozen miles from the lake. The sources of the lakes are likely to attract tourists before long. Few persons would care to make the canoe journey which I undertook for 200 miles up the river, but Lake Itasca can be reached in one day by wagon from Park Rapids, which is the terminus of a branch of the Great Northern railway. From Lake Itasca the voyage down the Mississippi is comparatively easy."

GENTLEMEN:—Enclosed herewith find my check for $10, for which you will please send me a box of your Putnam Nails, size ... Sunol has been shod with your nails ever since she wore shoes, and I do not think she would be as sound and reliable without them. I was again in with my shoeing and took a look at her feet. I have never seen better shoeing done anywhere, and Sunol never had her feet in better shape than she is now. I was again in with my shoeing last Sunday, and she was as sound as a dollar. I can now work anywhere and Sunol will go sound as a dollar. Yours,

GEORGE CUMMINGS.

Notice to all concerned: Unless on the 4th day of April, 1894, I am found shoeing Sunol with Putnam Nails, I will forfeit the sum of Ten Dollars.

"The Putnam Nail is the only special Hot-Forged and Hammer-Pointed nail.

"Ask in your smith's shoeing box if the nails have smooth sides, for the whole length they are stamped PUTNAM, for they are Hammer-Pointed and are not abusive.

The above picture, from a photo representing the Beauty in the act of kicking off a Putnam nail, while experimenting for strength, which proved to be the loss of a half dozen nails, and, as usual, white paper with white nails, as usual, a triumph of a good shoeing for a champion.
