Police Court Matters.

The police court did no business this morning. The following cases were disposed of:

Annie Smith was arraigned on the charge of vagrancy. She is 50 years old and lives on Second South and Third East street. The officers testified that she is notorious. Almost every night she is accosted by strangers on the streets. Officers Farr, Sedgley and Stringer testified that they had seen the defendant in and about Bing's saloon, in an intoxicated condition, almost every day, and that she had associated with disreputable men.

In examining one of the officers, Mrs. Smith said, "Did you see me drunk on the street?" The officer began answering in the affirmative when she interrupted, "No, I don't think you did, I wouldn't think it." Again she questioned, "Did you see me you saw me in a room with men?" The officer admitted he saw her in company with men, when she again interrupted him by saying, "You're sure I never was in rooms with men?" This style of examination caused much laughter in court and her counsel, John Marshall, instructed for the defense in his testimony. Did you see Mrs. Smith's mother-in-law very much, I mean did she seem very guilty and anxious to have you go to jail.

Jack Sick, charged with disorderly conduct, was discharged.

Henry Harper owned up guilty to being drunk and disorderly. He was asleep on a flight of steps, and the cars were in motion.

Eva Baker plead guilty to the charge of prostitution. Time for sentence was set for tomorrow afternoon.

Lee Nicholson will be tried for vagrancy and using insulting language tomorrow. He was allowed to go on $47 bail.
