QUESTION OF ORDER.

It is Discussed and Settled in the House.

"GRATUITOUS INSULT" RESENTED.

The House Gets Lost in a Complicated Parliamentary Tangle.

The Council continues to lead the House in the number of bills introduced. At least some of those that have been introduced in the upper house propose to duplicate statutes already in force. This is the case, at least in part, with President Hoeodon's bill relating to cruelty to animals.

The proposition which the same gentleman has introduced in another bill introduced by him on Tuesday, to extend the period of redemption of real property sold at forced sale, from six months to two years, is a response to the demands of existing conditions. Until recent years not much real estate in Utah was under mortgage, but since the boom gave a stimulus to real estate transactions, very many pieces of realty have changed hands on terms that provided for a mortgage as part payment of the purchase price. On account of the prevailing financial stringency, it has been impossible for mortgagors to meet their obligations, and hundreds of them are in danger of being what they have sold towards a home, farm, etc., which seemed like to which to redeem from a foreclosure sale would, in most cases, be entirely inefficient, according to the present prospects of the money market. All those of people who have in this Territory would be glad to receive the proposed extension of time for redemption in case of forced sale, and so a bill of similar purport to that of Mr. Hoeodon has been introduced in the House it is likely that some measure of the kind will pass.

Mr. Hoeodon's bill, introduced yesterday, to provide for the maintenance of illegitimate children, raises a peculiar inquiry. In the laws recently so enacted in Utah that special legislation is required to provide for their support? Such is certainly not the prevailing public impression.

In the House yesterday the new rule of rules, proposed by the committee, was read. It is to be at its last session, was numerous amendments, some of which are important. There was no permanent change in the constitutional rules to the effect that members of Congress thought they would rather see the proposed rules in print before voting on them, and a motion to print the rules other than those with the amendments offered by the committee was adopted unanimously.

A somewhat serious question was raised in the House yesterday, and it occasioned considerable time. A communication from the Council announced that that body had passed the accompanying concurrent resolution, providing for bids for the public printing and the election of a public printer. Nebeker moved that the House concur in the action of the Council. At the time when this motion was among the House was considering a different order of business from motions and resolutions, and Varian made the point of order against Nebeker's motion that the Council resolution ought to lie on the table to come up in regular order. Nebeker urged that a communication from the Council was privileged at all times. Varian replied that it was not privileged enough to be immediately read to the House, but it was not privileged far enough to cause a complete suspension of business the House might have in hand, and proceeded to show how the regular order of procedure in the House would be constantly interrupted were such rule to prevail.

To the general surprise, the chair overruled Varian's point of order. Then Allen made a similar point of order by stating that the order of business under the head of motions and resolutions was not under consideration by the House, and business under that head, to which the Council communication belonged, could not be taken up unless the rules were suspended. The chair again surprised all the parliamentarians present by overruling Allen's point of order. Allen appealed from the decision of the chair, who attempted to state the issue. Varian rose to correct the statement of the question, and then Allen, and, in so doing made it clear to the Speaker that both he (Varian) and Allen conceded that a communication from the Council was privileged far enough to be read without laid before the House, but that, when this was done, the subject matter of the communication must be taken up in regular order. Speaker stated that he had not so understood Allen's point of order, but that, in the light of this explanation, he would sustain it. The question, important in procedure was settled, and in a very proper manner.

In the House strong pressure has been brought to bear upon the committee on memorials to provide its immediate action upon measures in its hands. The passage between Powers and Allen yesterday added to the pressure, and the committee held a meeting last evening. The printing of memorials had not been completed, however, and the committee was not ready to report. It was decided to hold another meeting was held this forenoon. About a dozen different resolutions were under consideration. The meeting today lasted several hours.

Hon. Joseph Standard, of the capital grounds commission, informed the writer today that the commission would endeavor to prevail upon the Assembly to grant an appropriation of $12,000, to be expended as follows:

For completing the work of grading and improving the grounds, $2,000; for care, etc., of the grounds for two years, $6,000; the balance of the appropriation to be used for the erection of a part of the Capitol building sufficient for the temporary needs of the Territory.

The question of making the University and Agricultural College is probably the most important one that will be presented to the Assembly. A member of the Council said today that he had heard but one other member express an opinion on the question, and that all the others were reticent in regard to the subject. He declined to state the opinion he had heard, and also his own, and expressed the view that a serious contest over the question would probably be had. While evidently desired not to commit himself to a reporter, he went far enough to say that, in his opinion, an average climate should be chosen for an agricultural experiment station. The connection to which this was said conveyed the inference, whether intended or not, that Cache valley was too cold. Hall's memorial asking Congress to donate the lands for the Agricultural College, provided for in the statehood bill which passed the national House of the 51st and Indian reservation, has no bearing on the question of site. It merely serves to save the lands named there, for offers no plan for disposing of them, this being left to Congress.

HOUSE.

Immediately at the close of our report yesterday, Allen's library bill was read the second time and referred to the committee on education.

A bill providing for the payment of jurors and witnesses' certificates was introduced and sent to the judiciary committee.

Jakeman introduced a bill to amend the mining law, which went to the five ninth committee.

Allen introduced a bill for the contingent expenses of this session of the Assembly. It appropriates $1,200 for the purpose. Allen moved that the rules be suspended and that the bill be put upon its passage.

Nebeker constitutionally remarked that he was glad to see Allen return his former position. On the first day he wanted every bill referred to.

Allen said it was the second not the first day that that matter was raised, and it was in reference to memorials and not bills.

Powers then said: "We are to understand that there is a difference between a measure to permit Utah as a state and a measure give the gentlemen no passage status." Laughter.

Varian moved to amend by making the amount appropriated $2,000 instead of $1,200. The amendment was agreed to and the bill passed.

Varian introduced a memorial to Congress asking that the real estate of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, escheated, or reverted. It is as follows:

Whereas, under proceedings had pertinent to the act of Congress of March 3, 1887, certain real property of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, held in violation of the act of Congress of July 1, 1862, has been forfeited and escheated to the United States; and,

Whereas, the purpose for which the said Church was deprived of said property was to aid in the suppression of polygamy and its practice; and,

Whereas, polygamy has long since ceased to exist in Utah, and Congress has virtually so recognized in the act passed at the last session of Congress, authorizing the restitution to said Church of the religious and charitable property therein taken from said Church and the members in pursuance of the act of 1887 aforesaid; and,

Whereas, The said forfeiting and escheating said real property also now pending on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Therefore

Be it resolved by the Council and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, that all said real estate of right ought to be restored to said Church, in the same manner and to the same effect as the same conditions as the personal property heretofore returned, and

Be it further resolved that we do hereby petition Congress to so restore said real property by appropriate legislation to that end, and

Be it further resolved that copies of this memorial and resolution be forwarded to the presiding officer of each house of Congress and to our delegate in Congress."

Varian moved reference to the committee on memorials.

Urban moved that the rules be suspended and that the memorial be put upon its passage.

Powers seconded the latter motion.

Varian expressed his willingness to accept the amendment of Urban as the original motion, and the vote on the passage of the memorial was taken by ayes and noes. It was unanimous.

Varian offered a memorial to Congress remonstrating against a reduction of the tariff on sugar. Committee on memorials.

Tolton introduced a memorial to Congress asking that the Women's Industrial Home be sold and the proceeds given to the school fund. Committee on memorials.

Sears offered a resolution that the first seats in the auditorium be reserved for the exclusive use of ladies. Adopted.

Powers offered a resolution calling upon the committee of memorials to report on the statehood memorial at once.

Allen characterized the resolution as a gratuitous insult to the committee. The memorial had not been printed till today; the committee had had no opportunity to act; it had an appendix of 100 pages; the chair, and also in so doing made it clear to the Speaker that both he (Varian) and Allen conceded that a communication from the Council was privileged far enough to be forthwith laid before the House, but that, when this was done, the subject matter of the communication must be taken up in regular order. Speaker stated that he had not so understood Allen's point of order, but that, in the light of this explanation, he would sustain it. Allen, from the committee on memorials, reported favorably on the memorial of Hall, H. 8.

The House took up memorial No. 3, protesting against the act which was amended as recommended by the committee and then, in order up in regular order, was read the second time.

Pending the order a long and heavy debate took place on the question, from the amendment of the report of the committee have the effect of moving the amendments to the memorial recommended in the report? The chair ruled affirmatively.

VOTE.

The rules of the House dispense with a roll call on adjournment.

Hon. R. S. Hallet, of, was a visitor to both houses today.

City Marshal Archer Pratt took a look into the Council chamber today.

Councilor Hogan, who has been absent for two days, was to his seat today.

The House took to Kitson minutes later than that of Nebeker.

Many of the members of the House have their names posted on their desks.

The House has no interest in the reports page. He is a sight little boy.

The House Judiciary committee was in session at 10 o'clock today, and did not take their seat until after nine.

Hon. W. H. King, President of the Council of the 25th Legislative Assembly, was a visitor in the council today.

Judge Miner, of Ogden, who is attending the session of the supreme court, was in agling among the legislators today.

The new appointed chief Justice of Utah, Judge R. A. Smith, today received the congratulations of members of the Assembly, among whom he was moving.

The manner in which the House minutes are prepared contrasts that with excellent official record of its proceedings will be preserved, and that the officer to whom the duty is committed, J. G. Kimball, the House chief clerk, is a thoroughly efficient functionary in that position.

Probably no previous session of the Assembly has ever had as much work to hand at so early a stage as is now the case with the present one. During the afternoon many members of both houses were in their seats, apparently hard at work, and others were attending committee meetings.

The sergeant-at-arms was directed to keep order in the lobby at a certain time in the proceedings yesterday. He went back among the crowd and said: "(?) have to ask you to keep order, or I shall clear the lobby. You make more noise than the men at the other end," meaning the members of the House. A general laugh ensued.

In the House this afternoon a painful need for a good parliamentarian was manifested. The proceedings were simply brought to a standstill because nobody knew whether or not the adoption of a committee report recommending the passage of a bill had the effect of actually making those amendments without further action by the House.

Nebeker has a habit of startling timely or well-timed and of excusing himself with doubtful and emphasis, which creates the impression that he is what is commonly called a solid man; but he was not parliamentarian enough to extricate the Speaker and House from the parliamentary tangle into which they were plunged yesterday by his incorrect motion in relation to a concurrent resolution.
