VALE, LIBERAL PARTY!

From a double-leaded editorial in this (November 10) morning's issue, under the caution, "What Now?" in the Salt Lake Tribune, we make the following extract—the italics being ours:

Some of the best and truest men of the Liberal party, considering the fall election, declare that the time has come when a full trial of the people of Utah on the American plan should be made. They urge that if the experiment proves a success, we will all be glad, for that is what we have all been always hoping for; if it fails, it will be easier to reasonably appeal to the American sentiment then, than as though we were to keep up the division, and supply to the opposition such excuses as are given for the work on Tuesday last.

We subscribe to that view. We think all Liberals should remain about Liberals, that is, they should always keep a zealous watch on events as, from day to day they transpire, but should cease to act as a separate political organization. We think it the bulk of Liberals decide that this is best, they should in the same time determine in the new line to perform their duty as American citizens. When anything right can be done, they should give it hearty support; if anything wrong shall be attempted, they should cry out against it and call upon the Mormon people to help them in the work.

All working together we can make a great State of Utah; if the members generally of the Liberal party perform their full duty on the line marked out above, and fail, it will not be their fault, and they can then appeal to their own manhood for defense, and appeal to the judgment of a candid world for their vindication.

Commenting upon the foregoing, the News can scarcely do better than repeat the congratulations it tendered the Liberal party the day after the recent election in this city. We recognize that the remainder of the "best and truest men of the party" have at last made themselves heard, and we rejoice that the Tribune should have so gracefully joined with them. We believe it had been better if this decision had been reached sooner, but it is still in time to prevent much future wrangling and discord. We would also prefer to note that convention was the result of absolute conviction rather than, as hinted above, it were essayed as an experiment; but, relying upon the assurance that the experiment can only prove satisfactory, we welcome unconditionally and unreservedly this mighty step towards Utah's advancement, and greet our fellow citizens with all the fervor and affection that their sincerity can desire.

Not only as ex-Liberals, but as Republicans and as Democrats, yea, as patriots every one, should they keep a jealous watch on events as they transpire. In supporting anything that is right, and crying out against anything that is wrong, they may call upon the Mormon people to help them in the work, and the News promises that they will not call in vain. Truly, we can make a great state of Utah, all working together; and if all hands will now perform their full duty on these lines our bright horizon will contain no cloud so big as half.

THE ACT OF HONDURAS.

The firing upon the United States steamer Cuna Blue by the authorities of Honduras, because the captain of the vessel refused to give up a refugee who was on board, is an extremely malicious affair. Were the United States a weaker power it could not so much afford to act along with. There always has been a feeling among the politicians of this country that we could better afford to pass a molestation of Americans without action than to assume an attitude which had even the appearance of tyrannizing over a weaker nation, and it looks sometimes as though this fact was taken advantage of by certain spatters to strut and show themselves off for the amusement of spectators. This affair at Amapala appears to be just such a case. The Cuna Blue and an unarmed barge and pinnacle the United States would gain nothing by retaliation, but it is a question whether she has not a moral obligation in connection with the affair to at least teach Honduras a lesson in good manners. Anything more than that does not seem to be necessary.

SHOEMAKER, STICK TO YOUR LAST!

The following dispatch, dated Grand Junction, Nov. 8th, from a high official of the Rio Grande Western railroad, addressed to a responsible creditor on the Chicago mainline ticket, we have handed in for consideration:

"I notice Herald and News indicate H. G. W. Brown is in Salt Lake City the coming day before Christmas, and Herald is without foundation, and the proper parties will be notified every day of its information the accusation is false for reason. Does accusation should be withheld until reports verified.

The proper party to "substantiate the accusation" is the senior of the above dispatch, so far as he charges the News with intimating anything of the kind against his road; and this sport will accord him every facility in its gift. He will search three columns in vain for any such charge to be alleged by us; we have an abiding belief that no matter how many boxes were brought in from adjacent or remote places the election day, mighty few of them, thanks to the vigilance of the judges, registration officers and challengers, were allowed to vote. We have certain notions of our own as to the activity of the railroads, or rather of some railroad men, during the election now passed, but we have not yet felt called upon to ventilate them and have no close so. If we shall later deem that the proper time has come we shall not need from anybody else's hand the favor of "every facility to substantiate" our accusations; we shall take it without asking or permission, and tell our story and prove our charges in our own way and at our own convenience.

LORD MAYOR'S PARADE.

The celebration of Lord Mayor's Day, November 9, in London, as referred to in our dispatches, has long been characterized by a monster pageant which parades through the chief streets in the older part of the great metropolis. It is of necessity a very expensive affair, and it is hardly to be wondered that this year the display was limited by the loss of thousands of unemployed workingmen, to whom it was a stinging reminder of the vast sums of money spent in needless show, and who thought of their own poverty-stricken condition and the distress that exists elsewhere in the United Kingdom, particularly in the coal regions.

Lord Mayor's Day is a great occasion in London, and the suggestion that the money the celebration cost would have been better spent in relieving the poor, will not meet with general favor among those with whom the observance of the day has become a custom honored by long continuance. It is a holiday, and no small number of people assemble to witness the ceremonies. From St. Paul's Churchyard, along which the procession always passes, there can be seen on an ordinarily fine day in London from one and a quarter to one and a half million persons who gather to view the parade. Such a crowd of people is inconceivable in a sparsely settled country like the West. The mass of heads, stretching as far as the eye can reach along the street, seems as closely packed as the stones in a cobble pavement, and the bodies of the people are as tightly and more closely still. Thousands of police, mounted and on foot, are on duty to keep in order the hundreds of thousands of people assembled, and the officers show thorough discipline and great skill in performing the labor.

It is not any wonder, under the strict regulations which the metropolitan police enforce, that the blessing of the parade was promptly suppressed. It would be the acme of rashness for a crowd to continue their demonstrations of disapproval if they wanted to keep out of jail, for as the parade takes place in daytime the offenders are easily recognized and it is but the work of a moment for an officer to summon assistance and make arrests. But the expression of the sentiment which was conveyed by the blessing is one of the many notes of warning that are sounding to the richer classes in England, who are even more fond of show than in our own country. These warnings, taken in connection with the spread of the democratic idea of government which is going on in Great Britain, indicate the growing danger of the poor masses engaging in a violent uprising against the richer classes. The former may be overthrown by the strong arm of governmental discipline, but the better and safer policy would be to avoid danger during hard times and unpopular by generous contributions to the needy poor.

REINDEER FOR ALASKA.

The government's attempt to introduce the Siberian reindeer into Alaska does not seem to have met with much success thus far, though the reasons which have attended the experiment appear to be more the result of bad management than the effect of causing the locality or the animal's alone.

The purpose of shipping reindeer to Alaska is that they may be used instead of dogs in drawing sleighs. They are stronger, hardier, and more fleet of foot than the dogs, and it is believed that their introduction will prove an important feature in developing the country and adding to its route thorough exploration. The move for bringing the animals in was suggested by a report on the distressing situation of some of the Esquimaux, when the difficulty of getting supplies to the sufferers was complained of. This led to congressional investigation and an appropriation of several thousand dollars to buy reindeer in Siberia for use in Alaska.

The animals can be bought in Siberia for $5 apiece. The government agent there is a Mr. Bruce. He purchased a lot of the animals and shipped them to San Francisco, where they are now, awaiting transportation to Alaska. On the ocean voyage, as the vessel bore into a warm climate, the reindeer became affected by the heat, and several of them died. Since landing, another has succumbed to climatic influences, so that of the shipment there are now but six remaining. It is believed that on reaching the cold region they will thrive as in the native country.

As to future shipments, Mr. Bruce is now endeavoring to get permission from the authorities at Washington to send the animals direct from Siberia to Alaska. It is to be hoped that this request will be granted, as it will afford a better opportunity to show whether the Siberian reindeer will flourish on Alaskan soil, or rather snow and ice. Don't one, if the experiment is successful, will greatly facilitate travel. Fastened to a sled by a harness which consists of a band over the shoulders and between the legs, and guided by reins to the horns, the reindeer covers the distance over snow and ice-clad roads as rapidly as a good horse on an open highway.

ANIMALS AND CRUELTY.

Mexico is known as the land of bull fights, the exhibitions of the bovine contests there outclassing even old Spain in their coarse elements. But a movement for a change has been inaugurated, with good promise that in time the Mexican bull-fight will be numbered among the barbarities of the past. An agitation against the practice was instituted recently in several of the Mexican states, the chief efforts in that direction being made in Vera Cruz. In that state the exhibitions were not as barbarous as in some others, but it was generally conceded that if the anti-bull-fight movement could receive legal approval, other states would follow the example and in the course of time the whole republic would be reached.

News just received from Vera Cruz announces the success of the movement there, and that by the law of the state bull-fighting and cock fighting have been declared to be misdemeanors, punishable by fine and imprisonment, with confiscation of all the animals and other properties intended to be used in such exhibitions." Of course, the advocates of the humane movement have an arduous task before them to convert all Mexico to their view. But a great victory has been gained in this one achievement, which effectually disposes of a popular idea that the barbarous practice could never be abolished in our sister republic.

In the matter of cruelty to animals most of the civilized nations now have laws which afford protection, when properly enforced, to the dumb creation that is made to subserve the use of man. In many places, however, these laws are not enforced with proper vigor—a fact which it is unnecessary to go from home to establish. The impalement of birds or the unnecessary torture of animals to meet the requirements of fashion has been prohibited in Italy, according to reports of investigators sent out by societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals, the horrible practice of flaying kids alive was indulged in, the cause of it being a belief that the quality of gloves made from kid skins thus taken was improved. As Italy has a law against such cruelty, the practice was carried on in a clandestine manner. The attention of the government was, however, called to the matter, and the result is that the following instructions have been issued to magistrates throughout the country by signor Lucchini, the prefect at Rome:

I, the undersigned, desire to make public a letter which I have received from the president of the society for the prevention of animals. If it be true that the commission is in the barbarous custom to skin kids or goats alive, it must absolutely cease. Animals that are to be killed for food must be killed without the infliction of the slightest unnecessary suffering. Laws against cruelty to animals are founded upon the great moral law, and must be strictly observed. It is enough to call the attention of the magistrates to the fact, as the object is one that humanity the will will be supplemented, and that wherever a case of cruelty to animals will be immediately denounced to the prefect. Anyone who is guilty of inhuman acts, the law must be better be punished by fines. Such an action is an offense against the moral consciousness of men.

The Italian Senate discussed recently the use of animals that are of service to man should be deeply impressed upon all. The training in elementary, societies, public schools and institutes should aim at the formation of a strong sentiment against inflicting unnecessary suffering upon the lower creatures, entirely among with reference to animals. Much good has been accomplished in this direction by public instruction, but the desirable end is not yet attained.

WITHOUT REFERENCE to the authenticity of the following telegram, we can agree with an esteemed contemporary in thinking it tells its own tale, and also in the comments upon it:

"WASHINGTON DEAR BROTHER—Brother, September 25, 1893.

"Mr. John Minchell—Your mother, dated today, to Jane Minchell, Amelia county, Va., is undelivered. Reason—Party was buried this morning.

"H. W. DAVEY."

This is somewhat in the style of Playwright Hoyt's stories of how a western sheriff was called upon to apologize to a widow for hanging her husband by mistake. The sheriff did it in the poor and sobbing style, "Madame, the jaigh's on me."

ON NOVEMBER 10th Martin Luther, the great German reformer, first opened his eyes upon this mortal world. If he had lived until now he would have been 410 years old.

MODE LITHOTIAN.

This magnificently successful House has finally gotten possession of the magnificent parlors on second floor, until recently occupied by the Union Club, and they are now fitted up in luxurious and home-like shape and are being used by the delighted boarders of this elegant, unique and high-class family Hotel, at which a limited number of fine rooms and board can now be had for the winter. Citizens of Salt Lake City who desire the quietude of a home combined with the very best of service and careful attention to every want and a superior table can now obtain these luxuries at a very reduced rate.

The Cullen Hotel, 10th, on the European plan, rates $1.00 and $1.50 per day. George Cullen, Assignee.

LETTER FROM EVAN W. FIELD, JR.

6 EAST 14 STREET,
NEW YORK, May 8th, 1893.

Several times this Winter I have suffered from severe colds on my lungs. Each time I have applied Allcock's Porous Plasters, and in every instance I have been quickly relieved by applying the screening cloth and one on my back. My friends, through my advice have tried the experiment and also found it most successful. I feel that I can recommend them most highly to any one who may see fit to try them.
