CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

Naval Bill—Tax Collection by Stamps.

WASHINGTON, 17.—Cragin, from the committee on naval affairs, reported back the House bill increasing the number of seamen to ten thousand, and asking that it be passed.

Sherman had no objections to the bill being considered now, but he was opposed to its passage and could vote it; the bill was laid over.

Sumner introduced a resolution instructing the committee on finance to inquire into the expediency of abolishing the office of commissioner of Internal Revenue and other offices under him, and that internal taxation be collected by stamps, unstamped articles to be liable to seizure and confiscation by any United States court, the law to be enforced under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury; passed.

Economy Urged.

The morning hour expiring, the regular order came up; being the resolution reported by the finance committee, and Fenton addressed the Senate in favor of simplifying the financial machinery, curtailing the expenditures and restoring a specie basis. The resolution was then laid aside.

Windom asked that the House resolution for the holidays be taken up.

Morrill, of Me., wanted to take up the special naval appropriation bill, and opposed adjournment on Friday.

Edmunds opposed any holiday adjournment as did also Thurman, Logan, Hamlin and Sherman.

The Senate then took up the House resolution and on motion of Edmunds indefinitely postponed its further consideration, the vote standing yeas 37, nays 27.

The House bill to repeal the bankruptcy act was referred to the judiciary committee.

The Senate then took up the House bill making an extra appropriation of $4,000,000 for the navy.

Sumner inquired if the amount asked for had already been expended, and declared his belief that not another dollar ought to be paid in this direction.

Sherman was satisfied with what had been done, but wanted further expenditures in the same direction stopped, and said he was opposed to the proposed increase of the force of seamen. This was the time for retrenchment and reform. Last month the public debt was increased nine million dollars, the deficiency this month would not be less than ten or twelve millions. It was the duty of the administration to stop, for a time, all improvements, and every kind of unnecessary expenditure.

HOUSE.

Judges Busteed and and Durell —Public Buildings — Consular Offices.

Wilson, from the judiciary committee, reported a resolution authorizing that committee to send for persons and papers in the inquiry as to the official conduct of Judge Busteed, of Alabama, and authorizing the same committee to inquire and report whether Judge Durell, of Louisiana, should be impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors, with power to send for persons and papers; adopted.

Duell offered a resolution instructing the committee on expenditures on public buildings to enquire, first, as to the condition and management by the government officials of the money heretofore appropriated for public buildings; second, whether such moneys have been disbursed in conformity with the appropriation laws; and third, what retrenchment can be made in the expenditure of the money so appropriated without detriment to the public service, with power to send for persons and papers; adopted.

Secor offered a resolution, instructing the committee on foreign affairs to inquire into the expediency of revising and readjusting the compensation of the consular offices; adopted.

The Senate amendment to the bill for the redemption of the loan of 1858 was concurred in; the bill now goes to the President for signature.

The salary bill came up, and Kasson moved to reconsider the vote on his amendment adopted yesterday, making the bill operative from the 4th of March, 1873, and then moved to lay the motion on the table, which was done by a vote of 167 to 94.

Hale moved to strike out that portion referring to the President, and said he would move a similar amendment in regard to the cabinet officers and to the employees of Congress. They should look not only to the question of the value of the President's time for four years, but to the effect on his future life. Having held that office, an ex-President was, in substance, debarred from the ordinary pursuits and avocations of life, professional, commercial, public or otherwise. He did not believe a president ought to be left, at the expiration of his term, to be impoverished by his position, as Thomas Jefferson was.

Clymer favored the repeal of the entire law of March 1873, so far as the Constitution permitted, and would make the pending bill applicable to the present executive, and reduce his salary to the original figure, but favored the provision maintaining the salary of the supreme judges. He warned the House not to defy the popular will, which some had scouted at as popular clamor, as whoever opposed it would be overwhelmed.

Tremain moved to amend Hale's amendment by excluding from the effect of the repeal the Vice-President, members of the cabinet and the Speaker of the House.

Dawes thought it would be impolitic, in the present condition of affairs, to increase the salaries of the cabinet, while they were demanding the imposition of fresh taxes upon the people, and he declared that the members of the cabinet were heartily co-operating with Congress in its efforts to cut down every unnecessary expenditure, whether in salaries or anything else.

Truesdell wanted to know if Dawes had the authority of any member of the cabinet for saying that he is opposed to the increase of his salary.

Dawes replied that he made the statement upon his knowledge of the character of the cabinet, who, he said, would not stand before the country asking an increase of salary while increasing their burdens.

Truesdell, at Blaine's request, omitted the Speaker of the House from the scope of his amendment, which was then rejected, yeas 72, nays 122.

Butler, of Mass., will be voted aye under the instructions of his State.

Hale's amendment in reference to the President's salary was then rejected, ayes 76, nays 176.

Pelham offered an amendment, requiring the members of the present Congress who received the back pay as members of the last Congress to refund it by monthly deductions, and directing the treasurer to communicate the passage of this bill to the ex-members of the last Congress, and to pay into the treasury the money that should be returned.

Beck asked Poland whether Congress had power to compel ex-members to return their back pay, and on Poland's replying that the amendment did not propose that, Beck inquired, if they had as much right to keep their back pay as the President had to retain his, why insult them behind their backs and not dare to put the proposition to the President.

Poland went on to speak of his amendment, and on further questioning by Hale as to how the ex-members were to be compelled to return their back pay, he said that if any of them looks to further political preferment they would treat the requisition of the U. S. Treasury, and the money would burn in their pockets.

Beck asked Poland if he thought the President's money would burn in his pocket.

Poland replied that the question was hardly germane to the subject. (Laughter.)

Holman moved to amend Poland's amendment by omitting everything in reference to ex-members.

Poland accepted the amendment, which was agreed to, 55 to 101.

Maynard offered an amendment, excepting from the operation of the bill the employees of the house; rejected without the ayes and nays.

Butler, of Mass., moved to amend by adding a proviso requiring all the members now, who had also been members of the preceding Congress, and had received back pay, to return the same to the treasury. He appealed to the House to come up to the matter quietly and like men, and support the substitute which would be offered for the whole bill by the gentleman from Ills., Hurlbut, fixing the salary at six thousand, to take effect from the passage of the act. (Cries of "Good, good; that's right.") The question was taken viva voce on Butler's amendment, and it was carried, 113 to 70.

Hurlbut then offered a substitute, which fixes the salaries of the members of Congress at six thousand dollars and the necessary travelling expenses, and gives the Vice-President and Speaker of the House two thousand dollars additional per year. It repeals all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this, and provides for covering into the treasury all returned back pay.

Hurlbut moved the previous question on the substitute.

Dawes wanted to offer a proposition, to substitute the bill reported by Orth under instructions.

Butler, of Mass., objected, but it being discovered that Hurlbut had, as it afterwards appeared, by the advice of Butler, changed the bill after it was read, so as to fix the salary of the Speaker and Vice-President at nine thousand instead of eight thousand dollars, Dawes claimed the right to debate the proposition, a point which the Speaker allowed, and Dawes, after animadverting upon the alteration of the bill pending the vote, proceeded to speak in opposition to the substitute.

The previous question was then seconded, 141 to 48, and the main question was ordered, 167 to 105. The question was taken on substituting the Hurlbut proposition for the pending bill and all amendments thereto, and it was, amid much excitement and after several changes of the vote from no to aye, agreed to, yeas 38, nays 130.

A motion to reconsider was made and laid on the table, the yeas and nays having been refused on the latter motion.

Roberts moved to adjourn, but the motion was greeted with loud cries of "no, no," and much confusion.

Hale, of Me., rose to close the debate and, after an ineffectual attempt to put him down with points of order, he proceeded, amid great confusion and noise, to state why he considered that the substitute was not a proper response to the demand of the country for a substantial repeal of the law of last Congress. He characterized it as an evasion of the public voice, and stated that if this bill went to the wall a proposition, involving a clean, straightforward, substantial repeal would be introduced on the first Monday that the House would be in session, and he believed that it would pass the House and satisfy an indignant country.

Dawes, amid increased confusion, and with more than his usual earnestness, objected to the substitute.

Garfield argued in favor of taking the substitute as the only practical method of reaching a conclusion on the matter before the House.

Hawley of Conn., Burr, Cox and Kasson spoke against the substitute.

In reply to various questions the Speaker stated that if the House refused to order the bill to a third reading the bill would fail, but that if it was ordered to a third reading the previous question would then be exhausted, and a motion might be interposed to recommit the bill with instructions to report another bill forthwith. The House then, by a vote of 159 to 105, ordered the bill engrossed for a third reading.

Hurlbut then got the floor, and yielded to Butler, who said he had supported Hurlbut's substitute because he regarded it as a compromise. He then proceeded to speak on the general subject, saying that the howl of the newspapers had been provoked because their dirty sheets had not been allowed to go free through the mails; it was on that account that Congress had been pursued with forty jackass mud power. The trouble had arisen from the fact that the members did not stand together; "but" said he, "let the men up there," pointing to the reporters' gallery, "who live by the bounty of Congress, write diatribes against them and blacken them all over until the whole world is made to believe that the members of Congress are worse than other men, instead of being, as they are, the chosen of the nation and better as a class than men in any other profession." He argued that the salaries fixed by the law of March, 1873, were not too high. He spoke in the midst of much confusion that it was impossible to get more than a slight idea of his remarks. He was surrounded by a crowd of members who were applauding and encouraging him. At the conclusion of Butler's remarks, Hurlbut moved the previous question, which was seconded and the main question was ordered, yeas 131, nays 120. The question then being on the passage of the bill, the yeas and nays were demanded, but refused, and the bill passed on a division, 122 to 74. A motion to reconsider was made and laid on the table, and then, at nine o'clock, the House adjourned.
