RULES FOR VOTERS.

With the registration disposed of, the balloting comes next, and we again present these general rules for the guidance of voters:

1—If you wish to cast a straight party ballot, put a cross in ink in the black square to the right of your party emblem, and make no other mark.

2—If you wish to make any change whatever from a straight party ticket, do not make any mark opposite either party emblem.

3—When you do not vote a straight ticket but pick your candidates, put a cross in the space at the right of each candidate you wish to vote for, and make no other mark on the ballot.

By following these rules you will have no difficulty whatever in having your ballot just as you want it to be.

HANDLING THE AUSTRALIAN BALLOT.

The voters will have plenty of opportunity to examine and learn how to handle the Australian ballot during the week preceding election day—if the county officials do their duty. During that week the publication of a sample ballot is to be made wherever a paper is published in a county; and publication is not confined to the place of printing, but extends wherever the paper is circulated. Hence nearly every county should have its ticket distributed to readers of papers during the week preceding the election. The county clerks also are required to have sample ballots on file in their offices, where the voters can obtain copies to study and compare; and political parties will distribute some in their canvass for voters. With all this, there should be no voter in the State who is not fairly well provided with a knowledge of how to prepare a ballot, and do so easily on election day.

As the News has stated on several occasions, there is no difficulty in the way of a voter who exercises ordinary care preparing his ballot just as he wants it, and in a way to be counted for the candidates of his choice. Some people have sought to scare voters by attempting to make believe that there is much of a complicated character connected with the Australian ballot, so far as the voter's part is concerned. The object for this undue exaggeration of the task is quite clear as a political dodge in one or another party. If a voter can be scared into thinking the ballot extremely intricate, then the chances are ten to one that that elector will vote a straight party ticket as the easiest way to get out of the supposed dilemma; or doubtful and independent voters will stay at home rather than be put to any trouble. What some party politicians want is the straight ticket, and no selection of a better candidate from another ticket. That would narrow the selection of the voter to the solid party ticket he will support in the main, and is the chief purpose of any "scaring" effort. Another effect of exaggerating the difficulties of the ballot system for the voters is to cause doubtful ones among the latter to stay home rather than take the worry and trouble of preparing and casting a ballot and risking its being in improper shape.

As a matter of fact, there need not be the slightest difficulty for any male or female elector of ordinary intelligence in making up a ballot to suit himself or herself, either by selecting a party ticket entire or by choosing from all parties, provided that voter gives a few minutes' consideration to the published sample ballot. And such consideration is essential to intelligent action on the part of any elector. If the voters of other states where the ballots sometimes are a hundredfold more complicated than there is a possibility of their being made at this election in this State, can do the work with few blunders—and they do—the intelligence of the people here ought to get them through with very few errors indeed, so far as the voting is concerned.

The News will publish a sample ballot for the information of its readers; some of the party papers also will have this ballot to so as to be [illegible] from the county clerks so everybody ought to be acquainted with it. Our columns will contain the Salt Lake county ballot—the most intricate of any county in the State, since there are many more names on it than on any other county ballot. By applying to this ballot the simple "Rules for Voters," given in these columns, the voter can learn in one lesson how to attend to the ballot-preparation business with ease and accuracy.

As to a comparison with the ballots in some of the other states, our readers may contrast this one with that of California for instance—and that is less extensive than in some other states. This year there will be fully five hundred names on the California ballot, and then two tickets have been rejected for irregularities—the Taxpayers' Water party and the Free Silver and Protection party. The nominations filed thus far in that State, and accepted, embrace those of the Citizens' Republican, Democratic, Anti-Charter Democrat, Republican, Citizens' Non-Partisan, Citizens' Independent, People's, Socialist Labor and United Labor parties. Allowing for the requisite space between each name, the official headings and spaces for stamping, the ballot promises to be about four feet long by two and one-half feet wide—a "blanket sheet" indeed. But in Utah the ballot is a comparatively small sheet, in most of the counties very small, easily read, understood and prepared, and certainly one on which the voter should have no trouble in indicating just what he wants in a way that the judges of election shall count the ballot as intended by the elector.

THE EUROPEAN SITUATION.

The prediction of dire disaster hurled against Great Britain by Tynan, the alleged dynamiter now released from custody in France, sound like the ravings of a maniac. He declares that within the present generation an Irish republic will be established and that natives of New Zealand will yet stand on the ruins of London bridge wondering at the destruction that has been wrought on the site of the modern Babylon. War, he declares, is now on against the British government, and it will not end until English rule is broken and the fragments scattered to the four winds. He intimates that his mission to Europe, whatever that may be, has been successful, and that these results will follow.

All this is of course noisy bombast, and the one that utters it thereby proves that he is not very dangerous. Still, the present time is remarkable for commotion among the old nations of the earth, the final outcome of which undoubtedly will be radical changes, and that Great Britain is nearing a critical period of its existence may be true. She stands isolated, notwithstanding the efforts of the English, Danish and Greek courts to bring about an understanding with Russia, and her great extension over territory in all parts of the earth is looked upon as a source of weakness rather than strength.

On the European continent it is regarded as probable that England before long will have to face the necessity of fighting for her existence. Bismarck's paper, the Hamburger Nachrichten, says everything that has happened lately in Asia Minor and eastern Asia is but a prelude to the great struggle to be fought between Russia and England, and then proceeds to explain the situation as follows:

The Northern Colossus has shoved his advance guards near the gates of India and is working ceaselessly on the road necessary for the transportation of troops. England nervously prepares for the defense. England wants Arabia, Syria, and Armenia to attack the Russians on their march to India. She wants Crete to hold the Russian fleet stationed in the Black Sea in check; she wants the island of Quelpart as a basis of defense against the fleet of Vladivostock. But England does not act as a "Grabing" in Turkey solely to obtain new possessions. She hopes that a European war will bring about what she hoped to realize by setting Japan and China by the ears—a revival of her influence in the Far East. This will also lead England to intrigue in Corea. Russia's Siberian railroad is progressing, and Russian troops will soon be easily transported to Vladivostock; but until this railroad is finished, Russia wants peace. That is the reason England brought about the war between China and Japan. England thought it would be easy to get Japan to part with the isle of Quelpart and Port Hamilton, if Japan were allowed to take possession of Corea. In a similar manner England now wishes to get Greece in possession of Crete; in this case the Suda bay will be made a British naval station.

In Russia England is regarded as the chief source of all intrigue in Turkey, and this alone would furnish the czar's government with a pretext for carrying Russian arms dangerously near the borders of the rival, should the time be deemed opportune. There is manifested great uneasiness in the English press, and the only foundation for a hope that peace will be preserved seems to be the diversified interests of the continental powers.

Nations as well as individuals have a destiny to fulfil. Just now the vast empire of northern Europe is rising to eminence. What is its mission? How will it affect the tide of human events? The pages of the history of the next century will supply the answer to these questions.

TWO INQUIRIES.

The following inquiry was recently sent to the News:

A citizen has two wives. His first wife [illegible] His second wife was taken [illegible] plural marriage and an alien to this country?

The statement of the case is too indefinite to frame an answer to apply to the particular case our correspondent has in mind. For instance, he does not say whether the first wife died before her husband, and at a time when he was contracting the marriage relation with his plural wife would have constituted their association a common law marriage that was legal in Utah before certain enactments on the subject were passed. As a simple proposition, becoming a plural wife does not bring to the woman who is the liable of citizenship, since the marriage is not recognized by the law as a valid contract.

The other inquiry is:

"Can a woman who is of alien birth, who has been married to a citizen and who has been divorced, vote in this State?"

Her marriage to the citizen confers the right of citizenship. That right once conferred, is only lost as the law provides, and this is not done through either the death of her husband or her being divorced. She is entitled to vote if she has the qualifications other than citizenship, the latter having been attained by her when she became the wife of a citizen.

CHILDREN AND CRIME.

The ancient doctrines known to students of theology as universal depravity and inherited sin have been revived by the well known student of criminology, Lombroso, who has come to the conclusion that all children by nature really are criminals. It is natural, according to him, for children to lie and steal and do wrong, and it is only as they grow older that they outgrow these tendencies, provided they receive the benefit of a proper training in a right direction. If not, they are simply foisted on society with all their criminal tendencies and remain criminals. Accordingly, he maintains that the systematic study of the characteristics of school children, physical and mental, would bring about a revolution in the prevention of crime. In a lecture to teachers at Turin he pointed out that the inclinations of the child are almost the same as of the adult criminal, but usually disappear as age advances. In some instances, however, these characteristics are conspicuous and continue to be more prominent, in which case there are associated physical peculiarities; and it is in the detection and pointing out of these possible criminals of the future that Lombroso thinks the teacher can do so much truly useful work. In other words, the teacher must be an anthropologist.

As already intimated, Lombroso expresses in modern phraseology the old truth that human nature is tainted with corruption and that crime or "sin" primarily is a condition. Further investigation will undoubtedly lead to an acknowledgment of another old truth, that there is but one remedy against this condition—one way of salvation.

FIFTY-SIX YEARS AGO.

In looking for a parallel to the present widespread and intense interest manifested by all sorts and conditions of people in the present campaign—to the immense processions and the vast outpouring at political gatherings—the Chicago Times-Herald goes back to the famous campaign of 1840, when "Tippecanoe and Tyler too," swept the country like an avalanche. From May to November then, the country was alive with outpourings of the people everywhere, and considering the sparseness of the population and the imperfect means of travel the enthusiasm of that time was marvelous. The general stagnation in business that succeeded the panic of 1837 set everyone foot-loose. Then, as now, the active work was a young men's campaign, and then as now, the whole people were worked up in a national spirit that had not been displayed to any marked extent for a quarter of a century. Then, as now, the people were looking forward anxiously, with a fear that the unrest in the nation would not be calmed except through a violent eruption, which in the former time found its place in the great war of the Rebellion. Will the present uneasiness be quieted without such an awful culminating event?

Russia, within whose territory the most gigantic railroad line is rapidly nearing its completion, is likely before long to engage in the building of a canal before which all previous artificial water ways will appear insignificant. Foreign exchanges now give details of a scheme to connect the Baltic sea with the Black sea in this way. The plan has been advocated by the French minister Pitamaro and the cost is said to be in [illegible] of it.
