THE VALUE OF WORK.

God Helps Only Those Who Help Themselves.

Any careful reader of the Bible, or of the great book of nature, would never conclude that God ever meant to be otherwise than kind and merciful in his dealings with the children of men, or of any of the objects of his creation. In the Bible the oft recurring passages declaring that "like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him," show plainly that the intent of the Lord toward all humanity is only compassionate and kind. And, turning to the world of nature, not only do the Scriptures assure us that not even a sparrow falleth to the ground without the notice of the All Father, but the wonderful instinct which teaches the tiniest bird and insect where to find sustenance and how to build its little home, evinces a care and protection which can be only divine.

And so, when God told Adam that by the sweat of his brow he must earn his bread, there was naught of unkindness in the mandate, but only a merciful provision against the ennui and despair which it would seem must have overtaken the outcast from Eden had he been left to lament in idleness the sad results of his willful transgression. ...
