THE PRATT FAMILY.

Big Jubilee Reunion and a Permanent Organization.

INTERESTING TWO DAYS' MEETING.

Reminiscences of Pioneer Life and Experiences—Names of the Officers Chosen—Record Opened.

On Wednesday, July 21, 1897, at 2:30 p. m. at the Fourteenth ward assembly hall, this city, about 300 persons—probably the largest gathering of the Pratt family, their relatives and friends, that had ever gotten together in this region—assembled in commemoration of their respected sires—those dominant Pioneers, the late Apostles Parley P. and Orson Pratt, who, in 1847, just fifty years ago, entered this valley, Orson Pratt being the very first man of that memorable band who entered July 22, 1847, preceding one day (July 23rd) in advance of the main company led by Brigham Young—Parley P. Pratt and family coming in later in the season of that year.

From 2:30 to 3:30 p. m. was spent in the registering of the names and addresses of those present, and introductions and general sociability, and at 3:30 the assembly was called to order, when the following program under the management of Captain F. M. Bishop was rendered.

Remarks by "Aunt" Zina D. H. Young and Pioneer George S. Ballard.
Permanent organization.
Singing "Auld Lang Syne" by assembly.
Benediction by Elder A. H. Blower.

The hall was prettily decorated and striking life-size portraits of the two late Apostles, Parley P. and Orson Pratt, painted for the occasion by the artist Louis Pratt, son of the latter named Apostle, hung upon the walls immediately over the platform; also a portrait of Charles Pratt, the first earl of Camden, who distinguished himself after becoming one of the most eminent and successful pleaders at the bar. He became a member of Parliament and was made his majesty's attorney general, and in 1761 he was constituted chief justice of the court of common pleas. On July 18, 1765, he was advanced to the dignity of a peer of Great Britain by the style and title of Lord Camden, baron of Camden, in the county of Kent, and on July 30, 1766, his majesty delivered the great seal to his lordship as lord high chancellor of Great Britain.

A very interesting feature of the session was a quaint looking old flag made to represent the flag described in the autobiography of Parley P. Pratt when he made his escape from prison where he had been confined for over eight months by his enemies in Columbia, Boone county, Mo., July 4, 1839.

At the time mentioned, P. P. Pratt in his autobiography says: "The Fourth of July dawned upon us with hope and expectation. While the town and nation were alive with the bustle of preparation for the celebration of the American jubilee, and while guns were firing and music sounding without, our prison presented a scene of scarcely less life and cheerfulness, for we were also preparing to do proper honors to the day. We had prevailed on the keeper to furnish us with a long pole, on which to suspend a flag, and also with some red stripes or cloth. We then tore a shirt in pieces and took the body of it for the ground work of a flag, forming with the red stripes of cloth an eagle and the word "Liberty" in large letters. The quite fine of it and white was suspended on the pole from the prison window, directly in front of the public square and court house, and consisted one of the greatest attractions of the day. Its shrieks of the people from the country, as well as villagers who were there at the celebration, and who came to see and hear at the flag, and reading the motto, would go sweeping off together away, exclaiming, "Liberty! Liberty! Who have the Mormons to do with obtaining liberty in a damned old prison?" But notwithstanding their illiberal ejaculations, the escape from that dreary old prison was made that very day while this improvised flag of liberty still floated to freedom's breeze from the window of that old Missouri jail, proclaiming liberty to the victim of unmerited bonds."

The address of welcome by Parley P. Pratt was listening and inspiring, a portion of which is text can about as follows:

"As president of this reunion, I bid you all a hearty welcome to our family reunion. As well as this year of Pioneer Jubilee! I had greatly desired to meet with you and give to each one a personal kindly greeting; but as my Heavenly Father has seemed me to be brought down, at this time to the portals of death, I shall have to be satisfied to write from a sick couch a few broken sentences of thoughts, as they may be suggested to me by the Holy Spirit. I feel thankful that I have been born of goodly parents, and that my lot has fallen in past among a God-fearing, illustrious people. I feel thankful that my life has been spared to see this auspicious year of Pioneer Jubilee. I am in full sympathy with these family reunions, and take pleasure in contributing my mite for their success. This should be a time for the interchange of thought, a day of rejoicing, a day long to be remembered. These walls should resound with melody, with music and with songs of praise and thanksgiving, until every heart is softened and made glad.

"I was born March 25, 1837, at Kirtland, O. Soon after my mother died. While being reared by other hands, my father for conscience sake, by his a "dungeon board in Quincy" making his escape from prison, arrived in Nauvoo. My early childhood was spent in Nauvoo. I was acquainted with our Prophet Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum, and I have never had, during my life, a doubt in regard to their divine mission. When eight years old I was baptized in the Mississippi river by my Uncle Orson Pratt.

"Owing to the spirit of political and religious intolerance, my father and family, with many thousands of the Saints, including myself, did from Nauvoo. We crossed the Mississippi river on ice, in February, 1846. In our pilgrimage to the West through the wilderness of Iowa, under the leadership of Brigham Young, we suffered many hardships and privations. We had snow, hail and sleet, thunder, lightning and torrents of rain, being almost drenched to the skin. Have often awakened in the night, when sleeping in a tent, or under a wagon, and found myself lying in pools of water. Spent the dreary winter of 1846 and 1847 at Winter Quarters, on the bank of the muddy Missouri, were for the well of the necessities of life, many of the Saints died with scurvy and fever. Marion Bixby and myself were the "two boys" of the camp at Winter Quarters in the spring of 1847. The Omaha Indians being hostile at times, when we were out in the rolling hills with our cows, they would take a shot at us with their bows and arrows. At one time an arrow struck in a board one or two feet from my person.

"I was present in Winter Quarters when the great Pioneer company was organized, and saw them start out April 5, 1847, under the leadership of Brigham Young, on their pioneer journey across the plains. Some weeks later three thousand Saints and seven hundred wagons followed in the wake of the pioneers. Apostle Jedediah Grant and my mother, father having the general supervision of these five companies, in organizing pilgrims for journey across the plains to the valleys and mother to Israel was for the most part one of trial, hardship and sacrifice; to the young men and maidens, the "darkest hours" and their "silver lining." The trip to me, as a young boy, although surely vexed at times, was one of interest, novelty and pleasure. As the camps of Zion wended their way towards the land of promise, daily we saw herds upon our view, and now and again we would meet the hunter and trapper or a band of Indians decked with beads, ornaments and feathers. The novelty and battle at camp fires, the neighing of the horse, the lowing of the cows with their young calves, the deer, antelope and buffalo and foxes in wild gases, the chase, and the crack of the hunter's rifle, the fresh fish from the angler's hook, the vast plains and ancient hills, the rocks, rills and water, the new tree by the way side, the cool spring, the oasis in the desert, the Indian wigwam and grave, the wild flowers, and singing songbirds, the prairie fires and moonlight nights, the howling wolves and screaming night owls; the tangled thickets and dense and gloomy of Zion, all filled my young heart with delight and inspiration.

"During provision, by my father, with a good Indian pony, my boy companionship and myself, drove some more of the way across the Plains. We drove down Emigration Canyon, where we got a full view of the valley, Sept. 26, 1847. In my young dreams I had imagined we were comfortable enough to a land of timber, grass, flowers and gurgling spring; but when I saw the parched soil, the alkali beds, the sagebrush plain, the dry sand, rocks and hill-covered Indians, my heart sank within me, and I felt we had come to a land of desolation, instead of to a land of plenty. How thankful we should be for our mountain home, for the Lord has changed the desert into a fruitful Eden.

"I have been acquainted with the leading men of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints all my life, with the Prophet Joseph Smith, with Brigham Young, with Heber C. Kimball, George A. Smith, John Taylor, Joseph Young, Orson Pratt, Erastus Snow, Parley P. Pratt, and our venerable President Wilford Woodruff, whom I am so anxiously to lead Israel. These mighty, heroic, self-sacrificing, God-fearing men, with others, were laid the foundation, under God, of a church which is to endure for time and all eternity. It is expected that the sons and daughters of these early Pioneers of religion and the American desert will hold upon the foundation laid by their parents, until the earth shall be redeemed and Zion shall be placed upon a higher plane of intellectual, moral and spiritual progress.

"For the benefit more especially of the young, I desire to set down some of history in my father's life as we have gone published. In the fall of 1836 my father was stricken down with chills, and tend to his family gathered around him. "My time has come," said President Brigham Young, H. C. Kimball and others came to his bedside and said, "Brother Parley, we cannot spare you, we desire to keep you live to send us in the work of the Lord," when we replied, "Pray for me that I may be healed, and that my life may be prolonged." They then administered to him and he recovered rapidly, and spent the winter in traveling through the settlements. In the following spring, 1837, he was sent on a mission to the states, and died as a martyr in full mark of prophecy.

On Friday, July 23d, 1897, a reunion of the Pratt Family Association was held at Liberty Park, where a most enjoyable time was spent in the further acquaintance, pleasing and frolicking through the park. It was ascertained that there were present a hundred and fifty relatives and friends present upon this occasion. An autograph record was provided in which about 250 signatures were obtained. This record will also contain the minutes and the proceedings of the two days' meetings of the Pratt families. Another very interesting feature of the occasion was the wearing of a silver badge by the relatives and members of the family. These badges were made of silk, ribbon in Jubilee colors upon which was inscribed the following: "Pratt Family Reunion, July 23, 1897." "Jan. 21, 1847. Pratt Family Pioneer Jubilee Reunion, July 21, 1897."

An interesting letter from Elder John W. Taylor was received and read.

At the first meeting held on the 21st inst., a permanent organization of the Pratt family was effected, consisting of Parley P. Pratt, president; Nephi Pratt, vice-president; Milton Pratt, secretary; Samuel W. Pratt, assistant secretary and treasurer, the three latter named to act as the executive committee.

A committee of three was also elected to obtain the photographs of Parley P. Pratt, chairman, Jane Elizabeth Pratt Keeler and Corinne Pratt Driggs. MIRANDO PRATT,

Elder S. L. Swenson of Pleasant Grove called on the NEWS yesterday afternoon and reported a return from the Southern States, mission field. He left home September 17, 1895, and returned on the 23rd inst. The mission, he says, is progressing nicely, and the people are receiving and treating the elders quite generally in the spirit of good health. Elder Swenson labored in the states of Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, and opened up October 28, 1895. He has presided over that branch since February, 1896, and feels that the way is open for a good work in that locality.
