

Literature

POEMS EVERYBODY SHOULD KNOW.

TWO SONS.

(Robert Buchanan was born in Glasgow in 1857. He was educated at the University of Glasgow. He was a writer of drama, ballads and magazine articles. His collected poems have been published in three volumes.)

I have two sons, wife—

Two, and yet the same; One his wild way runs, wife, Bringing us to shame.

The one is bearded, sunburnt, grim, and fights across the sea, The other is a little child who sits upon your knee.

One is fierce and cold, wife, As wayward as the dog; Him no arms could hold, wife His no breast could hold.

He has tried our hearts for many a year, not broken them; for he Is still the sinless little one that sits upon your knee.

One may fall in fight, wife— Is he not our son? Pray with all our might, wife, For the wayward one;

Pray for the dark, rough soldier, who fights across the sea, Because you love the little shade who smiles upon your knee.

One across the foam, wife, As I speak may fall; But this one at home, wife, Cannot die at all.

They are both our only ones; and how thankful should we be We cannot lose the darling son who sits upon your knee!

—Robert Buchanan.

THE SPENDTHRIFT.

One came in the middle of the night, Through ways that no man knows, A wild intruder and bright, Unhid to my garden close; With jewels he hung the lilacs, With jewels he decked the rose.

And all in the quiet dawn These little coquettes and vain Speak still of him who has gone; 'Oh would he might come again! This splendid spendthrift and bold, This prodigal prince—the Rain.

—Theodosia Garrison.

BOOKS.

Mrs. Lily Dougall, author of the new mystery story, "The Summit House Mystery," which is rapidly passing from one edition to another, tells some interesting facts concerning its conception. She says, "A story which contained some of the main incidents here depicted was once told me by a venerable lawyer in one of the American cities. It was a story of a man who had been in the Atlantic seaboard. Afterwards I made a four months' stay in those regions of wonderful beauty described in this book, and, wanting a plot, I would work in with those alternating moods of nature—the gloom, the awe, the splendour, the joy, and above all, the aspects of victorious nature, the rugged mountain scenery from that of our everyday levels, the legal problem, which had taken strong hold upon my imagination, seemed to suggest a drama suited to the stage and scenery. The story, except its ending, was accordingly written. My final difficulty was to find a solution that fitted with my characters, and it was many years later that I woke up one morning among the Welsh mountains with the discovery of the last chapters clearly in my mind. The ending that I now need think myself dull if he does not guess a conclusion which it took me half a dozen years to discover."

"The Golden Flood," Edwin Lefevre's mystery of the money market, seems to have had the effect of drawing out of his notes all the cracks in the gold-mining mine. When the story was appearing in McClure's, a young fellow came to the magazine office and asked to look over two or three back numbers. He acted rather queerly, and seemed every page carefully. Finally, it was discovered that he was hunting through the pages of the "Golden Flood" for a recipe for making gold, which he said he had thought he would find there. Budding alchemists have favored Mr. Lefevre with a great deal of correspondence. One says, "You may disabuse your mind of it (the making of gold) being impossible, as I have succeeded in making gold in my laboratory in the past few years of chemical research in producing gold from common earth; also, have partially succeeded in transmuting iron and silver into the same. I am now trying to raise a few thousands dollars."

Used Round the World Walter Baker & Co's Chocolate AND Cocoa The leader for 124 Years Grand Prize World's Fair (St. Louis) Walter Baker & Co, Ltd. 45 HIGHEST AWARDS IN EUROPE AND AMERICA

LEAVES FROM OLD ALBUMS.

MISS ALICE HOOPER. (Mrs. Guy Palmer) as an Oriental Kirmess Girl.

Salt Lakers will remember the Kirmess held some 12 or 15 years ago in the old exposition building in the Tenth ward, under the direction chiefly of a number of prominent society women of this city. A number of popular young women were chosen to preside at the various booths, among them Miss Alice Hooper, now Mrs. Guy Palmer, a cut of whom is given above. Miss Hooper presided at the oriental booth, and the picture shows her in the costume worn at the time.

people but the educated younger generation. Tolstoy's doctrine is briefly, according to Kropotkin's book, "Don't resist evil by violence." It has taken England some time to get the Wagner fever. Perhaps the old country had arrived at a remote distance than ours from the "simple life." At any rate, it is only lately that the Wagner books have begun meeting with a sale at all comparable to their tremendous sale in this country. A shining edition of "The Simple Life" is said to have been the opening wedge.

Two recent books of short stories give in pretty direct contrast the divergent latter-day views of woman's ideal status. Mrs. Gertrude Livingston in "The Bell in the Fog," phrases what is evidently her own opinion: "You live in the woman's age. Your opportunities will be infinite. If you desire knowledge through shall be opened to you. You shall be a woman of the highest civilization, a woman who knows how to take her independence." On the other side of the case, Mrs. Mary Stewart Cutting, in one of her "Little Stories of Courtship," says sympathetically: "There are limitations to be independent. She was glad of the opportunity to earn her living, but if it came to preference, she would have liked to be taken care of by a man. If she had had a man, she would have liked to be taken care of by a man. If she had had a man, she would have liked to be taken care of by a man."

After all the ingenuity with which he has engineered Sherlock Holmes through the solution of many mysteries, Conan Doyle has resorted, in difficulties of his own, to the common or garden method of discovery, by resorting to the London Daily Mail this advertisement: "Lost . . . on road between Cambridge and London, box containing four ladies' hats and some articles of reward, Doyle, Grand Hotel." In Conan Doyle, in his statement that he has done with Sherlock Holmes in earnest, or with an appreciable couch in a new detective story in the making?

King Kalakaua, of the Hawaiian Islands, tells us in Mrs. Strong's book, "The Girl From Home," of a new cure for indigestion: "We had a sick man here once," said the king, "his name was King. He was very ill and put on an account of his health. He could not eat anything, and was slowly dying of starvation—some say of cholera. I sent him some of my servants with pot and raw fish; he began to get well from that day and now he is a member of parliament." For one of the chronic ailments of the island, explained, "In native food, like paste, when the sitting-room was prepared last year the men stuck the paper with pot and then they ate what was left over for lunch."

Mr. Tarkington tells, in an interview, an interesting piece of gossip in connection with his life at Rome, where in that contrast to such activities as are reflected in his book on politics, "In the Arena," he was giving himself up to idleness and rather more romantic exercises, such as are reflected in the new novellet. He tells how he came to know a woman, "a family coachman." "One day we saw a crowd of people gathered around a horse that was lying in the middle of the street. Four or five men had hold of him by the tail, and with yells and shouts were pulling him away, apparently with the intention of urging him to stand up. I saw that the horse was barely alive and sent for a bowl of hot wine and called out, which from some remote veterinary knowledge came to me as a suitable prescription. They brought the wine, and I tried to pour it into the horse's mouth crosswise. Finally, I got the poor beast's head propped up so that the medicine could be swallowed, when the horse gave a loud gasp, rolled its eyes and stiffened. I supposed it was dead, and with the uneasy conscience of a doctor who had made a false diagnosis, I gave the men a gold piece and begged them to imagine our surprise later in the day managed to scribble his answer on one of them. Mrs. Strong, with her peculiar bundle, marched out again past the guards, carried the answer to the secretary of state, and thus saved the situation. The Order of Oceania, which the king bestowed upon her for this service, consists of a beautiful medal with a palm tree design, worn with a great sash. It is recognized in all the courts of Europe.

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED BITTERS Thousands have been convinced of the great curative powers of the Bitters during the last few years. We want to convince you, too. That's why we urge a trial at once. It cures Poor Appetite, Sick Headache, Vomiting, Cramps, Constipation, Indigestion, Dyspepsia or Malarial Fever.

WHAT THE BEST MAGAZINES CONTAIN.

The Reader Magazine for June is a strong number of this increasingly attractive and popular periodical. The opening chapters of Meredith Nicholson's new serial, "The House of a Thousand Windows," are certain to attract attention while, with "The Man of the Hour" reaches its conclusion in this number. An appreciation of Lewis Jefferson by James S. McCall, dramatic editor of Life, covers the achievements of thousands of American playgoers. The article is accompanied by a fine portrait in this issue. George Frothingham, who is one of the most striking likenesses of Jefferson ever published. "Popularizing Classics" consists of a beautiful model with the work of the late Theodorus Thomas, written by Charles E. Russell. John

Historic Letters and Manuscripts Sold in London.

OUR LONDON LITERARY LETTER.

Special Correspondence. LONDON, May 25.—Seldom has a more interesting collection of autograph letters and documents been sold in London than that disposed of at Sotheby's this week on behalf of its owner, Francis Cecil Curzon, of Balger Hall, Shropshire. And as usual, though practically all the important purchases were made by agents, who did not reveal for whom they were acting, it is believed that the most attractive "lots" were secured by Americans. About the most interesting item in this sale was the original autograph manuscript of Sir Walter Scott's "Bonnie Dundee," ten verses of eight lines each, which Scott introduced into his drama, "The Doom of Devorgoil," but altered slightly before publication. For this manuscript $425 was paid. The complete collection realized slightly over $3,000 and included an autograph letter of Frederick Douglass to the Earl of Shaftesbury in 1782, and a letter written by Napoleon to his mother respecting his brother Jerome. For this $115 was paid. The famous letter from Lord Nelson to Lady Hamilton, already quoted in these columns, was knocked down for $205. For a letter written by Benjamin Arnold to the Earl of Shaftesbury in 1782, regarding the American war, $105 was obtained. There were also French letters of uncommon interest—one from Marie Antoinette to Necker, one from Rousseau to the Countess de Boufflers, and one from Voltaire to Algarotti. The queen's letter sold for $200. There was also the original manuscript signed by Lord Burghley and Sir Walter Mildmay to John Popham, attorney general, for his services in connection with the trial of Elizabeth I. For this $100 was paid. This was dated 1585 and was bid for $165.

It seems that the illness from which Dr. Max Nordau has been suffering for the past two months or more was a good deal more serious than was generally imagined. The author of "Degeneration" is able to get out, and he left for Carlsbad a day or so ago to recuperate. Anthony Hope has a grudge against commas. It seems that these marks of punctuation get into Mr. Hope's books—or rather into his proof sheets—in numbers. At Athens, the author of the novelist thinks desirable and that he has a word to throw in getting them out. Hope may be said to have gone "out" in the matter of commas, regarding the matter, for he dealt with his grievance at the annual dinner of the London Association of Correctors of the Press last week. The author told these correctors that they were too liberal with commas, and declared that if he submitted to them as despoils in many of his books, he would be a more tyrannical control over him.

Still another is to be added to the many books that have been written about Dickens' unfinished novel, "The Mystery of Edwin Drood." In a forthcoming issue of the "Pall Mall Magazine," the novelist thinks desirable and that he has a word to throw in getting them out. Hope may be said to have gone "out" in the matter of commas, regarding the matter, for he dealt with his grievance at the annual dinner of the London Association of Correctors of the Press last week. The author told these correctors that they were too liberal with commas, and declared that if he submitted to them as despoils in many of his books, he would be a more tyrannical control over him.

An interesting addition to current fiction is Mrs. Inob's serial novel, "The Girl From Home." Its scenes are laid in Hawaii, and the story deals with the romance of a young girl who goes to join her fiance there, and the adventures of her arrival in a beastly state of intoxication. Her adventures are laid in the land from the first of the book. "The Girl From Home," acquires a special interest from the fact that it is the only story yet written of Hawaii in the days when Kalakaua was king. Mrs. Strong spent nearly seven years in the islands. She was a prominent member of the court circle, and a close friend of Kalakaua himself. One of her most precious possessions is the Order of Oceania, which she received from Kalakaua under interesting circumstances. Near the close of her stay, she was taken ill, and her efforts were being made by the American party to bring about the annexation of the islands to the United States, a move to which, of course, Kalakaua was opposed. The politicians, and especially the missionaries, were very active, and planned what was to have been a mid-way coup d'etat. Mrs. Strong had undertaken to make for the king drawings to illustrate a book of his on the fishes of Hawaii. With a portfolio of these tucked under her arm, she braved the unsuspecting guards at the palace, and got an audience with the king. Upon one of her sketches the message was written, Kalakaua, while pretending to criticize the drawings, Macmillan Co. have issued two more of their paper bound novels, "On the West Trail," a story of the great wilderness by Caroline Brown, and "Foes in Law" by Rhode Broughton, the two making interesting additions to their popular cheap editions of modern novels.

WHAT THE BEST MAGAZINES CONTAIN.

Although barely two months have passed since the death of Jules Verne, not less than three French cities have settled on means of keeping his memory alive. The first place to do so was Chantilly, a manufacturing village close to Nantes, where Verne spent a portion of his youth. On the day after his death it was resolved that one of the streets in Chantilly should henceforth be called "Jules Verne street." A fortnight later the town council of Nantes arranged to set up a tablet on the house where he was born, to give his name to a square, and to open a public subscription for a suitable statue to his memory. At Amiens, the author has decided to rename the Boulevard Longueville, where the famous writer resided at the time of his death. HAYDEN CHURCH.

Historic Letters and Manuscripts Sold in London.

OUR LONDON LITERARY LETTER.

Special Correspondence. LONDON, May 25.—Seldom has a more interesting collection of autograph letters and documents been sold in London than that disposed of at Sotheby's this week on behalf of its owner, Francis Cecil Curzon, of Balger Hall, Shropshire. And as usual, though practically all the important purchases were made by agents, who did not reveal for whom they were acting, it is believed that the most attractive "lots" were secured by Americans. About the most interesting item in this sale was the original autograph manuscript of Sir Walter Scott's "Bonnie Dundee," ten verses of eight lines each, which Scott introduced into his drama, "The Doom of Devorgoil," but altered slightly before publication. For this manuscript $425 was paid. The complete collection realized slightly over $3,000 and included an autograph letter of Frederick Douglass to the Earl of Shaftesbury in 1782, and a letter written by Napoleon to his mother respecting his brother Jerome. For this $115 was paid. The famous letter from Lord Nelson to Lady Hamilton, already quoted in these columns, was knocked down for $205. For a letter written by Benjamin Arnold to the Earl of Shaftesbury in 1782, regarding the American war, $105 was obtained. There were also French letters of uncommon interest—one from Marie Antoinette to Necker, one from Rousseau to the Countess de Boufflers, and one from Voltaire to Algarotti. The queen's letter sold for $200. There was also the original manuscript signed by Lord Burghley and Sir Walter Mildmay to John Popham, attorney general, for his services in connection with the trial of Elizabeth I. For this $100 was paid. This was dated 1585 and was bid for $165.

It seems that the illness from which Dr. Max Nordau has been suffering for the past two months or more was a good deal more serious than was generally imagined. The author of "Degeneration" is able to get out, and he left for Carlsbad a day or so ago to recuperate. Anthony Hope has a grudge against commas. It seems that these marks of punctuation get into Mr. Hope's books—or rather into his proof sheets—in numbers. At Athens, the author of the novelist thinks desirable and that he has a word to throw in getting them out. Hope may be said to have gone "out" in the matter of commas, regarding the matter, for he dealt with his grievance at the annual dinner of the London Association of Correctors of the Press last week. The author told these correctors that they were too liberal with commas, and declared that if he submitted to them as despoils in many of his books, he would be a more tyrannical control over him.

Still another is to be added to the many books that have been written about Dickens' unfinished novel, "The Mystery of Edwin Drood." In a forthcoming issue of the "Pall Mall Magazine," the novelist thinks desirable and that he has a word to throw in getting them out. Hope may be said to have gone "out" in the matter of commas, regarding the matter, for he dealt with his grievance at the annual dinner of the London Association of Correctors of the Press last week. The author told these correctors that they were too liberal with commas, and declared that if he submitted to them as despoils in many of his books, he would be a more tyrannical control over him.

An interesting addition to current fiction is Mrs. Inob's serial novel, "The Girl From Home." Its scenes are laid in Hawaii, and the story deals with the romance of a young girl who goes to join her fiance there, and the adventures of her arrival in a beastly state of intoxication. Her adventures are laid in the land from the first of the book. "The Girl From Home," acquires a special interest from the fact that it is the only story yet written of Hawaii in the days when Kalakaua was king. Mrs. Strong spent nearly seven years in the islands. She was a prominent member of the court circle, and a close friend of Kalakaua himself. One of her most precious possessions is the Order of Oceania, which she received from Kalakaua under interesting circumstances. Near the close of her stay, she was taken ill, and her efforts were being made by the American party to bring about the annexation of the islands to the United States, a move to which, of course, Kalakaua was opposed. The politicians, and especially the missionaries, were very active, and planned what was to have been a mid-way coup d'etat. Mrs. Strong had undertaken to make for the king drawings to illustrate a book of his on the fishes of Hawaii. With a portfolio of these tucked under her arm, she braved the unsuspecting guards at the palace, and got an audience with the king. Upon one of her sketches the message was written, Kalakaua, while pretending to criticize the drawings, is as fragrant as a May-day flower.

GOLDEN GATE COFFEE

Never sold in bulk. J. A. Folger & Co. Established in 1850 San Francisco

CANCER CURED

WITH SOOTHING, PALMY OILS. (Cancer, Tumor, Catarrh, Piles, Fistula, Ulcers, Eczema, and all kinds of Painless Diseases. Write for illustrated book, sent free. Address: DR. BYE, Cor. 9th & Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.)

WHAT WHISKEY COSTS THE DRUNKARD.

Cure the Drink Habit With Orrin and Save Money.

Whiskey drinking does not pay. Take the sweetest possible without counting the loss of friends, the loss of business, the loss of manhood that comes to the drunkard, the empty stomach, the actual money paid out, and see the accounts in dollars and cents. Good authority states that near one-third of the wages of the laboring man goes over the bar. How much are you contributing? Please in six months how much you take from your wife and children and pay in exchange for drink. The total will astonish you, and you will swear off. Orrin, the only guaranteed cure for nervous, gives a good appetite and refreshing sleep. The cost is small. It is sold in bottles of 50 and recommended by Dr. Smith of Salt Lake City, Utah.

Red School House Quality is the safest guarantee under which to buy shoes. It has stood twenty years for honest footwear. The RED SCHOOL HOUSE TRADE MARK on a shoe means that it is the economical one to buy. It costs no more than any other good shoe and wears longer. The famous Red School House Shoes are sold for Boys, Girls, Men and Women. Watson-Plummer Shoe Company, Chicago. Manufacturers of Stylish, Serviceable Shoes. Ask Your Shoe Man for them.

UNION PACIFIC Three Trains Daily. VIA OMAHA KANSAS CITY TO CHICAGO ST. LOUIS and all Principal Eastern Points. Many hours quicker than any other line. No Change of Cars, "THE OVERLAND ROUTE" all the way. Electric-Lighted Trains running every day. Full information furnished on application to City Ticket Office, 201 Main Street, Salt Lake City.

GREEN, FANCY, IMPORTED AND STAPLE GROCERIES, FISH, CURED MEATS, POULTRY, ETC. Telephone Nos. 964-965-966. W. S. HENDERSON, 267-269-271 South Main St., SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH. WHOLESALE RETAIL. WHOLESALE TRADE ESPECIALLY SOLICITED.

CASTORIA For Infants and Children. The Kind You Have Always Bought. Bears the Signature of J. C. Ayer & Co.