The officer from Ephraim will arrive in the city at 4:45 this afternoon armed with the necessary papers, and will take his prisoner back to morrow morning, for examination. Pending the officer's arrival the accused will remain in custody at the Marshal's office.

THE KELLEY LIQUOR CASE.

One Witness Examined And Case Postponed Until Tuesday.

WAS LUMPKIN A "SPOTTER?"

He Hadjpeatedly Denies the Charge.—His Mining Scheme in the State of Idaho.

After the News had gone to press last evening, the case of Edward Kelley, proprietor of the Bijou saloon on State street, charged with selling liquor on Sunday, came up before Police Judge Elias. The courtroom was filled to overflowing with police officers, saloon-men and bellhops of whisky shops.

In the absence of Judge Powers Attorney Stringer appeared for Mr. Kelley. He asked that the case be continued for the reason that Judge Powers was engaged in the Third District court. Assistant Prosecuting Attorney Cole refused to grant the continuance unless satisfactory arrangements could be made to take the deposition of Witness Lumpkin who was about to leave for Idaho.

This was agreed to and soon after 3 o'clock, Mr. Lumpkin appeared in court as did also Judge Powers and Court Stenographer McGarrin.

Lumkin testified that he had a friend named Beaver call called at Kelley's saloon on Sunday last at 10 o'clock a.m. and bought two glasses of beer for which he paid ten cents. Judge Powers questioned the witness closely and confirmed what had been intimated, that he was going to Idaho to engage in mining.

Judge Powers then read the following which he said had been torn from one of the walls in the police station a few minutes before:

This agreement witnesseth that S. J. Lumpkin proposes to go on a prospecting tour to take locations wherever possible in veins bearing mineral, particularly gold and silver, and that the undersigned parties agree to pay the sum of $ per month each, and in consideration of said payment each subscriber is to have an equal interest in all locations made by the said Lumpkin. The said Lumpkin reserves unto himself the sum of $ per month as compensation for his services, and the remainder of the money subscribed is to be devoted to the purchase of a wagon and team of horses and general prospector's outfit, title to which shall be vested equally in all the subscribers. The payment of the sum of money herein mentioned to be monthly and placed to a joint fund, to be paid out as common expenses on vouchers of said Lumpkin. In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands this 26th day of July, 1892.

The witness said that he was the Lumpkin referred to in the above document, and that the paper was drawn up by City Recorder Stanley, that he had posted it in the police department where it could be seen.

He had never been employed by the police department; denied that he expected remuneration for his testimony in this case; denied that he was endeavoring to work the city officials in any kind of a scheme; admitted that he would as soon work for them as any one else; admitted having approached the chief of police on the matter; the chief did not sign any document; no one had suggested to him the impropriety of posting the paper in the police station; was not asked to go to Kelley's saloon on Sunday last; was not a spotter; could not remember whom he told that he bought beer at Kelley's place on Sunday; did not appear as a witness because he wanted to injure Kelley; no objections had been made to him posting the notice referred to in the police station; he did not tell anyone the liquor but believed his partner Mr. Reilly did; had also bought beer at the Valley House, St. Elmo Hotel and the Clubhouse saloon on Sunday last; did not tell Kelley and Reilly that he would have the city without testifying if they would pay him for doing it.

This closed Lumpkin's testimony and further inquiry into the case was postponed until Tuesday next.

MARSHAL PARSONS' GRIEVANCE.

That Criminal Libel Suit against Messrs. Goodwin and Nelson.

The charge of criminal libel preferred by Marshal Parsons against Judge Goodwin and Colonel Nelson, editors of the Salt Lake Tribune, was called upon in U. S. Commissioner Norrell's court at 2 p.m. today. All the parties were on hand practically at the appointed time, with the exception of Judge Powers, counsel for the defendants, who put in an appearance twenty minutes later.

Attorney E. B. Critchlow represented the complainant.

The libel complained of was the recent publication of an article in the columns of the Tribune with reference to the McKinnis case, in which certain statements appeared which, it is alleged, on the contrary of be Marshal.

The case appeared to excite some considerable interest, there being a large number of spectators in attendance.

Defendants having entered a formal plea of not guilty, Judge Powers said that on account of personal feeling between the Commissioner and one of the defendants, and as this might be somewhat embarrassing to the court, he would suggest, with the consent of counsel on the other side, that the matter be taken before another justice. While he (Judge Powers) and his friends had the fullest confidence in the judicial integrity of Commissioner Norrell, he made this suggestion solely for the reason stated.

Mr. Critchlow saw no reason for making such a change.

The Commissioner said that he would himself be pleased to agree upon the transfer of the case to another jurisdiction. If they could not, then he would have to make the order of his own accord.

The threatenings withdrew and counsel and spectators returning into court Mr. Critchlow intimated that he would prefer that his House should try the case. He would understand what that meant.

Finding that a mild protestation was unavailing the Commissioner said he should make no order transferring the hearing in Judge Kruger's court, and he prepared the necessary papers accordingly.

A message was dispatched to Justice Kruger, and that magistrate said he was willing to try the case forthwith. He just before this was stuck the "spotter" witness to the Third District courtroom. A few minutes later the Justice held a short consultation with Commissioner Norrell in the latter's office, and then went his way to practice over the beatings.

SAGE CHEESE.

Don't Lose Money on Butter, but Make it Into the Best Cheese.

Green cheese does not keep well, mostly cheese. It means sage cheese, rich, fine cheese that has been flavored with green, aromatic herbs, which make it much more palatable. Make the employ only in summer, when butter is low in price, and try your hand at sage cheese.

Mr. Henry Stewart gives in his book directions for making it as follows:

Sage cheese is another kind that may be made in a small dairy. This is also known as green cheese. For a cheese of that name, take large handfuls of green sage and half as much parsley and mangold leaves are bruised and infused over night in a portion of warm milk. The colored milk is added at sunrise of the milk to be curdled, and the rest of the milk is then added, and the rennet is put in. The curds are dipped, scalded and broken in the usual manner of the Cheddar system and the colored curd is then mixed, either evenly or in various shapes and devices, with the uncolored curd and is placed in the hoop.

Much ingenuity is sometimes expended in forming these devices by means of appropriate cutters and molds and incorporating them with the white curd. This cheese is ground and cured in the usual manner. Small green cheeses are made by bruising young sage leaves and spinach leaves in equal parts to a mortar and squeezing out the juice. The juice is added to the milk before the rennet is mixed, and, the curd being treated in the carefully broken, evenly and not too much, so as to avoid pressure for an hour. It is cured twice a day for five days and turned daily for forty days, when it is ready for use. This is a delicious cheese when made of rich milk and delicately treated. It is made of small size, weighing less than a pound.

Crematory Bathrooms.

We have sometimes wondered why so very few of our cremateries and those factories have a bathroom arranged for the employes. The cost—if planed with the buildings—is very small, and the return is more than the cost are very large, and need not be explained. We observe however that there is a movement in Denmark toward establishing public baths in connection with the crematories in that country.

A Mr. Bire has recently inclined his ideas to this scheme. First, because he considered the claim that otherwise sewer exhaust steam can be utilized as follows, saying that it is a properly heat stimmery there would be no waste of steam at all. Second, because he found that unless the sanitary conditions are made perfect there will always be an unpleasant idea associated with the combination. We fail to see why this should be objectionable so long as the bodies are thoroughly burned, well drained and kept perfectly clean.

Even granting the best condition that an exhaust steam is useful, we consider the case seem to show and more should be a great incentive to the crematorium and to the cremation. We have from personal experience the difficulties which have most farmers who wish to get their sewerage or manure to better condition which often drives them from getting it into that condition at least, and we consider the cremation of the dead may be reasonable reason, by direct or energy, made to be a good and honest, raising the standard of sanitary matters, with or one and of the other, that is night and a day, the dead of the dead, and the dead of the living, even if the manure or the use of exhausting and the cost of steam is considered. For the cremation we consider the idea is any nuisance.—Dairy Record.
