Amusements.

"DR. BILL."

A numerically fair audience gathered last night in the Theatre to witness the performance of "Dr. Bill and his Mistaken Friends." The piece itself seems to be intended for a entire open the medical profession, if it has any aim at all beyond that of creating sentiment. The dialogues and situations are at times exceedingly witty and funny and were so each thoroughly appreciated by the audiences. The various characters were fairly well rendered, particularly that of "Dr. Bill" by Mr. Wm. Wilson, and "Peasant" by Mr. Lorenzo Barnes. Miss Belle Stokes, although much more bold in her posture and attitudes than absolutely necessary, is a very graceful and clever dancer. "Dr. Bill" will be given again tonight.

GRIGNER AND DAVIES.

The coming of Joseph Grigner and Phoebe Davies with their excellent company at the Salt Lake Theatre for three nights and Saturday matinee, commencing next Thursday night, Dec. 10th, will be one of the dramatic events of the season. They will produce three of their best plays from their large repertory, opening in the lineal comedy-drama "The Burglar" by Augustus Thomas, author of "Alabama." Pretty night for the first time here, the domestic comedy-drama "Fernciliff" by William Haworth, Saturday evening "Second Legion" a picturesque military drama. The bill for the matinee has not yet been decided on.

An exchange speaks of the company as follows:

"The clever style in which the pieces are presented, the picturesqueness of all the performances and the splendid scenery brought forth had applause and gratulation a successful run."

Reserved seats on sale at Deseret News office in matters morning.

WONDERLAND.

At this popular place of amusement Jack Wade, the comic singer, Madame Bernardo, the "iron jaw" lady, and other curiosities attract the public.

CHORAL SOCIETY

Had a very enjoyable practice last night.

FOOLING THE EVIL ONE

HOW THE FRIENDS OF LEE HUNG YOU SAVED THE CORPSE.

How a Dead Chinaman in New York is Laid at Rest—The Body Lying in State—Scattering Bits of Paper Through the Streets of the Metropolis.

Lee Hung You was dead, and Lee Hung You was to be buried. The body of the Chinese gambler by whose he had died, in a small, stuffy, rather squalid room at 1 Mott street, not door to the temple of Joss, lay in the hallway prior to the fun. The skin was of that yellow that it had in life, in common with the rest of his race.

Lee Hung had killed himself—not by suicide and without malice. His lungs had been eaten away by opium smoking. Too fast, so that of a consumptive, was plucked and drawn, and the high cheek bones were made still more prominent by the hopelessness of the contracts.

For a time the body was alone. Lee Hung's countrymen avoided the dead whenever possible. They do not neglect the dead, however. Lee Hung's death had been anticipated. Before he died either Chinaman had gone to James Naughton, an undertaker in Mott street, and engaged his services. By and by the undertaker came to prepare the body for burial. Chinamen never bound in coffins or garment to the earth in life. To-day, a new dark blue trouser, black, baggy trousers, new sandals and white stockings were bought and put upon Lee Hung.

Then his one was wrapped loosely around his neck, from left to right, and on his head was placed a tight fitting black skull cap, having all its tops knot of red cloth. After the body was placed in the coffin the room where it lay was prepared for the visits of the dead man's friends. A tub was filled with earth and placed at the foot of the coffin, as was also a square piece of board.

THE MOURNERS.

All was ready. A group of Chinamen entered. Each one walked to the foot of the coffin chanting, and in the pan of earth each man stuck a candle about six inches long and as thick as a finger, and a piece of punkin substance of the diameter of a half pound. On the wooden board they heaped a little pile of papers. Then the priest of the temple of Joss lit the candles, the punk and the papers. A thick, pungent smelling smoke rose, and the Chinese filled the little room and drifted through the building, as the Chinamen chanted. In five minutes the candles, punk and papers had burned away and the Chinamen went out. Another group came in, and the same ceremony was repeated until all Lee Hung's friends had taken their farewell.

At 5 o'clock the undertaker came, and the time for the trip to Cypress Hills cemetery on Long Island was at hand. Within the coffin were placed a fan and numerous oblong slips of rice paper, on which characters were written, and then the coffin was taken to the hearse, which stood at the head of a procession of five carriages. On the windows of the carriages were pasted long slips of red paper covered with black characters. Into a wagon in the rear were hitched a live chicken, a live pig and several jars of boiled rice. A Chinaman took his seat on the hearse with the driver and the trip was begun. Immediately the Chinaman on the top of the hearse began throwing some oblong pieces of paper covered with characters into the street from a bag which he carried.

This was to protect the dead man. The Evil One always follows a dead Chinaman, but before he can catch up with the hearse and claim the dead man's soul he must pick up and read all the pieces of paper thrown from the hearse.

FOOLING THE EVIL ONE.

By the time the procession had reached the Thirty-fourth street ferry the Evil One must have been blocks behind, but the hearse had passed the ferry and he caught up. As soon as the hearse drove onto the boat the Chinaman commenced to slip with a lavish hand. A number of small boys, however, scorned the fortune of the Evil One, and scrambled to the deck by the papers, thus throwing the Chinaman into apoplexy.

The man persisted on the hearse, however, was equal to the emergency. Just as the hearse drove off the boat he threw all the slips he had left, a prodigious number, upon the deck, and before the Evil One could pick them all up he was carried back to New York, while the procession passed its way to Cypress Hill in peace.

On arriving at the cemetery the coffin was placed beside the open grave in the Chinamen's lot, where twenty or more Mongolians already lay, and again were candles, punk and paper lighted and chants uttered. Then the body of Lee Hung was lowered into the ground, and the dead smelling pig and boiled rice which had been set upon ground near the grave, were replaced in the wagon and taken back to Mott street.

Formerly the food was left at the cemetery for the departed, but transgressors of the custom and boiled a Chinaman found with delight, stealing it. Now after the ceremonies, as the procession wended its way to the cemetery, leaving behind a trail of appetizing smells. After the funerals the transgressor high carnival, with never a thought of the dead Chinaman, departed on his ghoulish feast. Consequently, to prevent this sacrilege, the Chinamen now take the food back with them and eat it themselves after they have returned to Mott street.

Lee Hung You will be mourned. He was worthy, in the Chinaman's sense of the term, a prominent, consolidation member and a loving and adhesive friend. Lee Hung's funeral was probably second only to that of the famous Lee Ah Tong—four years ago.

Thrifty in Letters.

The Duke of Fife with strange prudence is reported to have sent his wife to a local dry goods store, where they chose the stuff for a dress for her as a Windsor young miss, who gave a delicate tone and stylish. The wife subsequently sent the dress back to the person and when it was sent back we received into the hotel to go the receipt to find the writing—unmistakable Hanoverian.

Bad Luck.

A man at Fort Valley, Ga., has a calf with six legs and two heads, one heads separated from each other at the neck, giving the calf two distinct heads, with a set of eyes, both and ears each.

Why They Steal.

It is not as a rule the most timid and brazen, whom everybody is on guard against, that is the cause of life steals the most money. It is always the trusted employee who has the confidence of everybody about him that makes the great hauls. A few goes into an office fresh and bright from school. He has a fresh, tenacious way with him that all properly born men and women have in youth, before they have been cheated or shown that they have to take the matter with blunderers. But when in spite of being cheated over and again people can still retain this fresh, open way through life, it constitutes a great part of that mysterious charm we call magnetism.

The boy was the favorite of employers by his bright freshness, his quickness and good nature. They in time trust him to any extent, because good nature and chipperness coupled with a sunny truth are not plentiful in this world. He is good as for years. The trusted boy is promoted from post to post of honor and increased wages. They predict for him a splendid future, which he certainly has bound to attain. Then suddenly some trivial thing occurs, perhaps an absence from duty for a day, no matter what. Like a thunderclap comes the revelation that the trusted youth has been stealing right and left for a long time, robbing his friends and employers of hundreds, maybe thousands of dollars.

There was nothing the boy could not have applied to in that business house, but all goes for a crash. The story follows him, and his future is not ruined is clouded for years. Now it is certain that if he had only had some sensible—plain common sense and foresight—to stick to his work and injure himself, in a very short time he would have had far more money than he got by stealing. He stole simply because he had not sense enough to be honest. He with the trusted cashier or president. Those who think they know him but would pass their hands on his integrity, would trust all the securities of their firm in his hands, and do their trust them. Then some miserable fire is falls out that this respected citizen is a thief, a liar and villain.

The few thousands, even the hundreds of thousands for which he has betrayed both his present and future, are very paltry compared to what he has lost. The most miserable part of this whole wretched business of gentlemanly stealing is, too, that if the thief would only hold on and remain honest he would ere long in nearly every case have actually more money than he has with all his peculations. He, too, stole for want of sense. It is the best policy to be honest even if one is honest only from policy.

Be Rated.

In Cyrus Field's advice to young men on how to get rich he says: "Stick to what you undertake. Do honest and be honest. I don't believe in long business letters. There is no business so important that you cannot put the whole of it upon one sheet of paper."

Mr. Field's invention one of those great modern truths that sought to sink deep into every home and, but which is not. Cyrus also thinks the chances for making a fortune are just as good as they ever were, only the methods are different and large combinations of capital are now necessary. For then several poor persons can put their small capital together in one day and make it one large one, so that even the necessity for enormous sums to begin with may be met and fortune was, provided only people will be brief enough. The testimony of this man, who has managed many millions and made them grow larger always, is that he has made the cultivation of brevity in all things a prime point, and found that it paid.

Therefore, be brief, and you will get rich. Whether you make a call, write a letter or preach a sermon, be brief. When you write for publication, be brief. Make no palaver of beginning, make no palaver of ending. Dash into the midst of what you want to say, say it, and stop. The essays in the magazines and reviews could in almost every case be shortened by at least one-half and be the better for it. Life is too short in our country for a deluge of words.

"German Syrup"

Asthma. "I have been a great sufferer from Asthma and severe Colds every Winter, and last Fall my cough was so severe I thought sure I should die with consumption. Fortunately I was induced to try Boschee's German Syrup. I am confident it saved my life. Almost the first dose gave me great relief and a gentle restful sleep, such as I had not had for weeks. My cough began immediately to loosen and pass away, and I found myself rapidly gaining in health and weight. I am pleased to inform the—unbelieved—that I am in excellent health and do certainly attribute it to my Boschee's German Syrup. C. B. STICKNEY, Picton, Ontario."
